Edip-Layth - Quran: A Reformist Translation

Edip-Layth - End Note 1 (15:1)

A1L30R200. These letters/numbers play an important role in the mathematical system of the Quran based on code 19. See 74:1-56; 1:1; 2:1; 13:38; 27:82; 38:1-8; 40:28-38; 46:10; 72:28. Quran's divine nature, authenticity and the promise regarding the protection of its message (zikr) have been supported by the mathematical structure of the Quran discovered in 1974. See 74:1-56; 1:1; 2:1; 13:38; 27:82; 38:1-8; 40:28-38; 46:10; 72:28.

Edip-Layth - End Note 2 (15:9)

The Quran is protected through an interlocking error-sensitive mathematical code. The emphasis in this short verse is unique; with its four references to God and his angels, it makes it clear that it is not the humans who would protect it, but the One who revealed the message. The word zikr (reminder) establishes a link between the preservation of the Quran and its mathematical system, which is described with the grammatically feminine of the same word, zikra (74:31). See 9:127; 41:41-42.

Edip-Layth - End Note 3 (15:26)

Creation "from" clay has two meanings. (1) clay as the substance of origin, and (2) clay as a place of origin. Both meanings could be true at the same time, though we learn from other verses that clay is not the only substance used in our creation; water too is a vital ingredient. Our Creator started the biological evolution of microscopic organisms within layers of clay. Recent scientific research led some scientists to consider clay as the origin of life, since clay is a porous network of atoms arranged geodesically within octahedral and tetrahedral forms. This design creates sliding and flexible layers that catalyze chemical reactions. Humans are the most advanced fruits of organic life started millions years ago from layers of clay. See 29:18-20; 41:9-10; 7:69; 24:45; 32:7-9; 71:14-17.

Edip-Layth - End Note 4 (15:29)

The word ruh, does not mean soul or spirit, as commonly thought. In the terminology of the Quran ruh means revelation, inspiration, information, or commands. The word nafs is used to mean person or consciousness (39:42). If we try to describe the human genetic makeup and the program etched into the brain in computer language, it is like a piece of hardware that facilitates communication, processing, analysis and synthesis of information through an intelligent system program containing God's knowledge/commands/code/logic (ruh) in its core. Person (nafs) is analogous to an open system program that can be improved through new application programs, addition of new features, and memory (experience) data. This system program (person) can be put in hibernation (sleep), or terminated by the turning off of the switch, or by the destruction of its essential hardware (death) (39:42; 21:35; 29:57; 2:28; 10:56; 32:11; 45:15). Contradictory and irrational actions that are the products of reflexive choices, gullibility, superstitious ideas, intoxicants, religious dogmas, peer pressure, ignorance, etc, might make the system program vulnerable to the attacks of evil viruses and Trojan horses (6:116; 10:36,42; 17:36; 53:28; 2:170-171; 3:154; 8:22; 10:100; 12:40; 13:19; 28:63; 35:28; 39:9,18; 41:46; 45:15; 79:40; 9:31). If due to prejudice and acquired bad habits, they do not use vigilant virus protection programs called critical thinking or logic, numerous harmful and fatal viruses might infect and corrupt system programs (persons) beyond reform (2:231; 4:110; 7:160; 17:7; 31:13; 65:1; 91:7, and 6:110). Good intentions, thoughts, deeds, habits, good networks, and numerous tests advance the system program (person) to new levels (2:272; 23:60).

Then the improved or regressed system program is separated from the hardware (death) and uploaded (recorded in the master record/ummul-kitab) for evaluation (18:49; 6:38; 54:53). Those that kept the system program free from infection and corruption, and improved it through various tests, are beamed to a higher dimension for eternal enjoyment (89:27-30). The system programs (persons) that had progressed (through acknowledgment and good deeds) and passed all major tests (through a humble and appreciative attitude during blessings and tragedies) in its previous hardware (2:155; 3:186; 29:1-3); these few successful system programs will be matched with an indestructible hardware (body) to live in eternal bliss (81:7; 3:30,161,185; 40:17; 45:22; 50:21; 74:38; 89:27-28; 2:123,233,281). Also, see 17:85; 39:42.

Edip-Layth - End Note 6 (15:71)

Did prophet Lot mean his own daughters or the daughters in his town? Regardless, he was reminding them to follow God's design, rather than choosing a lifestyle that contradicts it. The distorted Bible contains many false accusations against prophets. For instance, it depicts Lot as a drunkard who committed incest with his daughters (Genesis 19:30-38).

Edip-Layth - End Note 7 (15:85)

The Quran contains some interesting hints regarding the end of the world. See 20:15; 72:27.

Edip-Layth - End Note 8 (15:87)

The meaning of saban minal mathani (seven from pairs) has been interpreted by the majority of scholars as "oft-repeated seven," implying the most repeated chapter of the Quran, the seven-versed first chapter. However, if the first chapter of the Quran is part of the Quran, it surely is the part of the "great Quran." If the arrangement of the words were different, "we gave you the great Quran and seven from pairs," then, such an interpretation could be more plausible, since a part of the whole can be repeated after the whole for the purpose of emphasis. If the "great Quran" is the entire Quran, which is the most reasonable understanding, then the "seven pairs" or "fourteen" (of something) might have implications beyond the Quran. There is a hint in the verse: it might refer to the life span of Muhammad's people and its relation to the end of the world.

Edip-Layth - End Note 9 (15:90)

These verses criticize the followers of sects, those who claim the existence of abrogation in the Quran, and those who ignore the entire context of the Quran when trying to understand a particular Quran statement or term. See 2:106.

Muhammad Asad - The Message Of Quran

Muhammad Asad - End Note 1 (15:1)

See Appendix II.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 2 (15:1)

Regarding this lengthy rendering of the participial adjective mubin, see surah 12, note 2. In the above context, the term Qur'an (which, whenever it appears without the definite article al, denotes a solemn "recital" or "discourse") is preceded by the conjunction wa, which, in its simplest connotation, signifies "and"; but since it is used here to stress the present, particular instance of the divine writ (al-kitab), it can be omitted in the translation without affecting the meaning of the sentence.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 3 (15:2)

Since this revelation-i.e., the Qur'an-is clear in itself and clearly shows the truth, those who deliberately reject it now will have no excuse on Resurrection Day. As so often in the Qur'an, the past tense in the expression alladhina kafaru is indicative of conscious intent (see surah 2, note 6).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 4 (15:4)

Lit., "unless it [the community] had a known divine writ (kitab ma'lum)"-i.e., unless the people in question had been shown through a divine writ the meaning of right and wrong, and had deliberately rejected this divine guidance: cf. the statement, in 26:208, that "never have We destroyed any community unless it had had its warners", or in 6:131, that God "would never destroy a community for its wrongdoing so long as its people are still unaware [of the meaning of right and wrong]".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 5 (15:5)

I.e., every community - and, in the widest sense of this term, every civilization - has a God-willed, organic span of life resembling in this respect all other living organisms, destined to grow, to reach maturity and ultimately to decay. For the ethical implications of this law of nature and its bearing on the passage that follows, see 7:34 and the corresponding note 25.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 6 (15:7)

Cf. 6:8-9. The reference of the unbelievers to the Prophet's revelation is obviously sarcastic (Zamakhshari); hence my interpolation of the word "allegedly". Although these verses relate primarily to the pagan contemporaries of the Prophet, they broadly describe the negative attitude of unbelievers of all times.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 7 (15:8)

Sc., "and not just to satisfy a frivolous demand of people who-refuse to consider a prophetic message on its merits". Moreover-as is evident from the next clause-an actual appearance of the angels to ordinary men would but presage the Day of Judgment (described in 78:39 as "the Day of Ultimate Truth") and, thus, the doom of the deniers of the truth spoken of here.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 8 (15:8)

Cf. 6: 8-"had We sent down an angel, all would indeed have been decided", i.e., the Day of Judgment would have come.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 9 (15:9)

I.e., the Qur'an. The grammatical form nazzalna implies a gradual revelation ("step by step") over a period of time, as has been pointed out by Zamakhshari in his commentary on 2:23 (see the last sentence of my corresponding note 14).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 10 (15:9)

This prophecy has been strikingly confirmed by the fact that the text of the Qur'an has remained free from all alterations, additions or deletions ever since it was enunciated by the Prophet in the seventh century of the Christian era; and there is no other instance of any book, of whatever description, which has been similarly preserved over such a length of time. The early-noted variants in the reading of certain words of the Qur'an, occasionally referred to by the classical commentators, represent no more than differences in respect of diacritical marks or of vocalisation, and, as a rule, do not affect the meaning of the passage in question. (See also note 11 on 85:22, explaining the expression lawh mahfuz.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 11 (15:10)

The term shi'ah denotes a distinct group of people having in common the same persuasion or adhering to the same principles of behaviour, and is sometimes (though not here) used in the sense of "sect".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 12 (15:13)

Cf. 6:10 and the corresponding note 9. My interpolation of the words "derision of Our message" is based on Tabari's and Zamakhshari's interpretations of the above passage. Regarding God's "causing" the deniers of the truth to sin, see surah 2, note 7, as well as surah 14, note 4.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 13 (15:13)

Lit., "although the way of life (sunnah) of those of olden times has already passed"-i.e., although the manner in which God has dealt with them has long since become a matter of common knowledge (Ibn Kathir).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 14 (15:15)

Lit., "we are people bewitched". Cf. 6:7, as well as the last paragraph of 10:2 and the corresponding note 5. The confusing of revealed truths with illusory "enchantment" or "sorcery" is often pointed out in the Qur'an as characteristic of the attitude of people who a priori refuse to accept the idea of revelation and, thus, of prophethood. The above two verses, implying that not even a direct insight into the wonders of heaven could convince "those who are bent on denying the truth", are a prelude to the subsequent passage, which once again draws our attention to the wonders of nature as an evidence of God's creative activity.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 15 (15:16)

My rendering of buruj as "great constellations" is based on the Taj al-'Arus; among the classical commentators, Baghawi, Baydawi and Ibn Kathir give the same interpretation, while Tabari (on the authority of Mujahid and Qatadah) explains this term as signifying "the stars" in general.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 16 (15:17)

The term shaytan ("satan") -derived from the verb shatana ("he was [or "became"] remote") -often denotes in the Qur'an a force or influence remote from, and opposed to, all that is true and good (Taj al-'Arus, Raghib): thus, for instance, in 2:14 it is used to describe the evil impulses (shayatin) within the hearts of "those who are bent on denying the truth". In its widest, abstract sense it denotes every "satanic force", i.e., every impulsion directed towards ends which are contrary to valid ethical postulates. In the present context, the phrase "every satanic force accursed (rajim)"-like the phrase "every rebellious (marid) satanic force" in a similar context in 37:7-apparently refers to endeavours, strongly condemned in Islam, to divine the future by means of astrological speculations: hence the preceding reference to the skies and the stars. The statement that God has made the heavens "secure" against such satanic forces obviously implies that He has made it impossible for the latter to obtain, through astrology or what is popularly described as "occult sciences", any real knowledge of "that which is beyond the reach of human perception" (al-ghayb).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 17 (15:18)

Lit., "excepting [or "except that"] anyone who seeks to hear by stealth..", etc. The implication seems to be that any attempt at fathoming the mysteries of the unknowable by such illicit means ("by stealth") is inevitably followed by "a flame clear to see", i.e., by burning, self-evident frustration. (Cf. also 37:10.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 18 (15:20)

Lit., "whose providers you are not"; i.e., all living organisms -whether plants or animals which are not tended by man but are nevertheless provided for. in its wider sense, this phrase stresses the notion that all living beings-man included-are provided for by God, and by Him alone (cf. 11:6).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 19 (15:21)

Lit., "but with Us are its storehouses".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 20 (15:21)

Lit., "and We do not send it down [i.e., "create it"] otherwise than according to a measure known [to Us]": that is, in accordance with the exigencies of God's plan as such and with the function which any particular thing or phenomenon is to have within that plan.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 21 (15:22)

I.e., by pollination as well as by bringing rain-clouds.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 22 (15:23)

Lit., "We are [or "shall be"] the inheritors (al-warithun)": an idiomatic metaphor based, according to the consensus of all classical commentators, on the use of the term "inheritor" or "heir" in the sense of "one who remains after his predecessor has passed away"-in this case, after all creation has perished. (Cf. the expression "the heritage of the heavens and of the earth" used, with reference to God, in 3:180 and 57:10.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 23 (15:24)

Or: "those of you who hasten forward [towards Us], and those who lag behind". Both these interpretations are considered equally legitimate by the early commentators.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 24 (15:26)

There are many references in the Qur'an to man's having been "created out of clay (tin)" or "out of dust (turab)", both these terms signifying man's lowly biological origins as well as the fact that his body is composed of various organic and inorganic substances existing-in other combinations or in their elementary forms-on or in the earth. The term salsal, occurring in three verses of this surah as well as in 55:14, adds a further dimension to this concept. According to most of the philological authorities, it denotes "dried clay that emits a sound" (i.e., when it is struck); and since it is used in the Qur'an exclusively with reference to the creation of man, it seems to contain an allusion to the power of articulate speech which distinguishes man from all other animal species, as well as to the brittleness of his existence (cf. the expression "like pottery" in 55:14). As the construction of the sentence shows, this salsal is stated to have evolved (Razi) out of hama' - which, according to some authorities, is the plural of ham'ah, signifying "dark, fetid mud" or "dark slime"-while the participial adjective masnun which qualifies this noun denotes, as Razi points out, both "altered" (i.e., in its composition) and "brought into shape": hence my rendering of this expression as "transmuted", which to some extent combines both of the above meanings. To my mind, we have here a description of the primeval biological environment out of which the "sounding clay" - the matrix, as it were - of man's physical body has evolved in accordance with God's plan of creation.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 25 (15:27)

Cf. 55:15- "out of the confusing flame of fire (marij min nar)": i.e., of non-corporeal elements. The noun al-jann, rendered by me as "the invisible beings", is in reality a singular, denoting here the kind of these particular beings or forces, similar to the use of the singular noun "man" (al-insan) which describes the collective entity "mankind". The etymology of the word jann (the plural of which is jinn) has been briefly touched upon in note 86 on 6:100; a more detailed discussion of its meaning is found in Appendix III.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 26 (15:29)

Cf. 2 : 30-34 and the corresponding notes, as well as 7:11-18. The allegorical character of all the passages bearing on the creation of man and on God's command to the angels to prostrate themselves before him is brought out clearly in God's saying, "I am about to create mortal man ... ; and when I have formed him fully. ..", etc.: for it is obvious that, in reality, no lapse of time is required for God's completing His creation - since, "when He wills a thing to be, He but says unto it, 'Be'-and it is" (cf. 2:117, 3:47 and 59, 6:73, 16:40, 19:35, 36:82 and 40:68). God's "breathing of His spirit" into man is obviously a metaphor for His endowing him with life and consciousness: that is, with a soul.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 27 (15:31)

See note 10 on 7:11. For the deeper meaning of this "rebellion", see note 31 below.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 28 (15:35)

Lit., "is upon thee".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 29 (15:39)

See surah 7, note 11.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 30 (15:40)

Lit., "Thy sincere servants": i.e., those who are so deeply conscious of God that no "blandishment of Satan" can lead them astray. (See also note 32 below.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 31 (15:41)

I.e., "this is what I have willed" - namely, that Iblis (or Satan) should tempt man, but should have no power to seduce those who are truly conscious of God. Thus, the Qur'an makes it clear that despite his ostensible "rebellion" against his Creator, Satan fulfils a definite function in God's plan: he is the eternal tempter who enables man to exercise his God-given freedom of choice between good and evil and, thus, to become a being endowed with moral free will. (See in this connection 19:83, as well as note 26 on 2:34 and note 16 on 7:24.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 32 (15:42)

Lit., "except him who shall follow thee from among those who are lost in grievous error". (Cf. 14:22, according to which Satan will thus address his erstwhile followers on Judgment Day: "I had no power at all over you: I but called you-and you responded unto me.") This phrase constitutes the essential difference between the above passage and the similar one in 7:11-18.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 33 (15:44)

Lit., "it has seven gates, [with] an allotted share of them for each gate". This probably means "seven degrees" of hell, i.e., of the suffering which, in the life to come, awaits the "followers of Satan" in accordance with the gravity of their sins (Razi; a similar explanation is given by Qatadah, as quoted by Tabari). It should also be remembered that the concept of "hell" as such is referred to in the Qur'an under seven different names, all of them metaphorical (necessarily so, because they relate to what the Qur'an describes as al-ghayb, "something that is beyond the reach of human perception"): namely nar ("fire, which is the general term), jahannam ("hell"), jahim ("blazing fire"), sa`ir ("blazing flame"), saqar ("hell-fire"), laza ("raging flame"), and hutamah ("crushing torment"). Since, as I have mentioned, these designations of other-worldly suffering are obviously allegorical, we may also assume that the "seven gates of hell" have the same character, and signify "seven approaches [or "ways"] to hell". Furthermore. it is well known that in the Semitic languages-and most particularly in classical Arabic-the number "seven" is often used in the sense of "several" or "various" (cf. Lisan al-'Arab, Taj al-'Arus, etc.): and so the above Qur'anic phrase may well have the meaning of "various ways leading to hell" -in other words, many ways of sinning.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 34 (15:47)

I.e., all being equal in dignity, and therefore free from envy. As Razi points out, the plural noun surur (sing. sarir), which literally denotes "couches" or, occasionally, "thrones", signifies also "seats [or "thrones"] of eminence" or "of happiness (surur)", from which latter word the noun sarir and its plural surur may be derived. The sublime. quality of these "thrones of happiness" is in some instances further symbolized by expressions like "gold-encrusted" (56:15) or "raised high" (88:13).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 35 (15:48)

Lit., "never shall they be caused to depart from it".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 36 (15:50)

In his commentary on the above two verses, Razi notes that the statement relating to God's forgiveness and grace contains a threefold emphasis-expressed by the repetition of the personal pronoun ana relating to God, and the definite article al before each of the two participial adjectives - whereas there is no such stress in the mention of His chastisement of recalcitrant sinners. (Cf. 6:12- and the corresponding note 10-as well as 6:54, both of which verses state that God "has willed upon Himself the law of grace and mercy".)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 37 (15:51)

For a more detailed story of Abraham and the heavenly messengers, see verses 69-76 of Surah 11 (Hud), which was revealed shortly before the present one. The connection between this story and the preceding stress on God's grace arises from Abraham's saying (in verse 56), "And who-other than those who have utterly lost their way-could ever lose the hope of his Sustainer's grace?" Similarly, the subsequent references (in verses 58-84) to the sinful communities that were destroyed because they refused to heed the warnings of their prophets are, obviously, meant to illustrate the reverse of God's grace, namely, His inevitable chastisement of deliberate, unrepented sinning (verse 50 above).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 42 (15:60)

See 7:83 and the corresponding note 66, as well as 11:81 and 66:10. My interpolation of the words "of whom God says" is necessitated by the elliptic use of the verb gaddarna - which, in the sense of "We have ordained" or "decreed", is an act attributed in the Qur'an invariably, and exclusively, to God. As I have repeatedly pointed out in my notes, God's "ordaining" a sinner to commit a sin or His "decreeing" that he should remain deaf to the voice of truth is a metonym for the natural law instituted by Him, which has been explained in surah 2, note 7; it refers also, generally speaking, to God's absolute fore-knowledge of how any of His creatures will act in a given situation (Zamakhshari). See also note 56 on 11:34 and note 4 on 14:4.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 43 (15:62)

Lit., "that about which they have persistently been (kanu) in doubt"-i.e., the doom which, in this world or in the hereafter, is the inevitable consequence of deliberate sinning: a prediction which the sinners themselves so often deride (cf. 6:57-58, 8:32, 11:8, and the corresponding notes). To my mind, this sentence constitutes the reason for the repetition, in this surah, of the stories of Lot's people and the other sinful communities of old that were punished for their persistent transgressions against all moral laws.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 45 (15:64)

The existence of that road, which led from northern Hijaz to Syria, skirting the Dead Sea-to the north-east of which Sodom and Gomorrah were situated-has received startling confirmation through aerial photographs recently published by the American School of Oriental Research (New Haven, Connecticut). These photographs clearly show the ancient road as a dark streak winding northwards, more or less parallel with the eastern shores of the Dead Sea.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 62 (15:87)

With these words, the discourse returns to the theme enunciated at the beginning of this surah and indirectly alluded to in verse 85 as well: namely, the revelation of the divine writ, destined to serve as a moral guidance to man, who cannot, as yet, discern the meaning and purpose of God's creation. - According to most of the authorities, including some of the foremost Companions of the Prophet, "The Seven Oft-Repeated [Verses]" is a designation given by Muhammad himself to the first surah of the Qur'an, which has also been described by him as "The Essence of the Divine Writ" (Umm al-Kitab) inasmuch as it alludes to all the ethical and metaphysical principles set forth in the Qur'an (Bukhari, Kitab at-Tafsir). See also my introductory note to Al-Fatihah ("The Opening").

Muhammad Asad - End Note 63 (15:88)

The philological authorities are unanimous in that the plural noun azwaj denotes here "kinds" of people, or "some" of them, and not -as certain modern translators of the Qur'an have assumed - "pairs".

Lit., "lower thy wing for the believers": an idiomatic metaphor for loving tenderness and humility (see 17:24 and the corresponding note 28).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 65 (15:89)

The above interpolated phrase offers, to my mind, the only satisfactory explanation of the definite articles prefixed to the words an-nadhir al-mubin ("the plain warner"). This construction possibly alludes to the Biblical prediction of the advent of the Prophet Muhammad appearing in Deuteronomy xviii, 15 and 18, which has been discussed by me in surah 2, note 33.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 66 (15:90)

Thus Zamakhshari, explaining the elliptic beginning of this sentence and its logical connection with the preceding verse as well as with verse 87.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 67 (15:90)

This is apparently a reference to the followers of the Bible, who "believe in some parts of the divine writ and deny the truth of other parts" (cf. 2:85)-i.e., who act in accordance with those principles of the Bible which suit their inclinations and the prevailing social trends, and disregard the others, thus denying, by implication, their validity.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 68 (15:91)

This, according to the Taj al-'Arus (art. `adiha and `adawa) is the meaning of `idin in the above context: an interpretation also advanced by Tabari and Razi (in the last paragraph of the latter's commentary on this verse). Another interpretation -equally acceptable from the purely linguistic point of view - is "[those] who cut up the Qur'an into separate parts": i.e., accept (on the analogy of the Jews and the Christians) some of it as true and regard the rest as Muhammad's invention. But since - as Tabari points out - those who refuse to believe in the divine origin of the Qur'an do not accept any of it as true, the first interpretation is by far the preferable.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 69 (15:96)

Lit., "who postulate (yaj'alun), side by side with God, another deity (ilah)"-a term which is obviously used here in its generic sense, embracing anything that could be visualized as a "divine power": hence my use of the plural.

Edip-Layth	16:110 Your Lord is to those who emigrated after they were persecuted, then they strived and were patient; your Lord after that is Forgiving, Compassionate.
The Monotheist Group	16:110 And your Lord is to those who emigrated after they were persecuted, then they strived and were patient; your Lord after that is Forgiving, Merciful.
Muhammad Asad	16:110 And yet, behold, thy Sustainer [grants His forgiveness] unto those who forsake the domain of evil after having succumbed to its temptation, ¹³⁶ and who thenceforth strive hard [in God's cause] and are patient in adversity: behold, after such [repentance] thy Sustainer is indeed much-forgiving, a dispenser of grace!

Rashad Khalifa	16:110 As for those who emigrate because of persecution, then continue to strive and steadfastly persevere, your Lord, because of all this, is Forgiver, Most Merciful.
Shabbir Ahmed	16:110 But certainly, your Lord; to those who leave their homes after trial and persecution, and then strive and patiently persevere, your Lord is oft-Forgiving, Most Merciful.

Edip-Layth	Prohibiting Blessings Invites Disasters 16:112 God cites the example of a town which was peaceful and content, its provisions were coming to it bountifully from all places, but then it rebelled against God's blessings and God made it taste hunger and fear for what they used to do.
The Monotheist Group	16:112 And God puts forth the example of a town which was peaceful and content, its provisions were coming to it bountifully from all places, but then it rebelled against God's blessings and God made it taste hunger and fear for what they used to do.
Muhammad Asad	16:112 AND GOD propounds [to you] a parable: [Imagine] a town which was [once] secure and at ease, with its sustenance coming to it abundantly from all quarters, and which thereupon blasphemously refused to show gratitude for God's blessings: and therefore God caused it to taste the all-embracing misery ¹³⁷ of hunger and fear in result of all [the evil] that its people had so persistently wrought. ¹³⁸
Rashad Khalifa	Prohibiting Lawful Food Brings Deprivation 16:112 GOD cites the example of a community that used to be secure and prosperous, with provisions coming to it from everywhere. But then, it turned unappreciative of GOD's blessings. Consequently, GOD caused them to taste the hardships of starvation and insecurity. Such is the requital for what they did.

Shabbir Ahmed	16:112 God gives you an example. Think of a township that used to be secure and prosperous, with provision coming to it in plenty from all directions. But, they practically denied God's blessings by not sharing them with the needy. So God's law made it experience the garb of hunger and fear for their wrong system. ⁴⁰

Edip-Layth - Quran: A Reformist Translation

Edip-Layth - End Note 1 (16:1)

See 57:22.

Edip-Layth - End Note 2 (16:8)

God creates new means of transportation we do not yet know about. According to the teaching of the Quran, God is the ultimate creator of everything, including our actions (37:96). We are only given a limited freedom of choice. This verse refers to all transportation vehicles that were not available during the time of revelation, such as, trains, automobiles, airplanes, helicopters, rockets, and spaceships. Since we are also the Quran's audience, it refers to many more to come in the future.

Edip-Layth - End Note 3 (16:24)

The language of the verse is interesting. It refers to the unappreciative people who reject the message of the Quran by labeling it a myth, and it also refers to the modern polytheists who follow hadith mythologies and consider them to be "revelation."

Edip-Layth - End Note 4 (16:25)

See 6:164.

Edip-Layth - End Note 5 (16:35)

See 6:23,148; 53:19-23.

Edip-Layth - End Note 6 (16:40)

Indeed the entire universe came into existence with an "abrupt" big bang. See 21:30.

Edip-Layth - End Note 7 (16:44)

The Arabic word BaYaNa means (1) explain an ambiguous message; or (2) declare a hidden message. This multiple-meaning verse is one of the most abused verses by the followers of hadith hearsay. They choose the first meaning. Their rendering, however, contradicts many verses of the Quran: the Quran is explained not by Muhammad, but by its author, God Himself (75:19). Thus it is described as a "clarified/explained book" (5:15; 12:1; 26:195; 44:6), and we are reminded over and over that it is "easy to understand" (54:17,22,32,40). Thus, the second alternative is the intended meaning, since the Quran was received by Muhammad in a private session called revelation, and his job was to deliver and declare the message he received. God orders Muhammad to proclaim the revelation which is revealed to him personally. Indeed, this is the whole mission of the messengers (16:35). Thus, the word "litubayyena" of 16:44 is similar to the one in 3:187. Verse 3:187 tells us that the people who received the revelation should "proclaim the scripture to the people, and never conceal it." See 2:159,160; 3:187 and 16:64. For a comparative discussion on verse 16:44, see the Sample Comparisons section in the Introduction. The Quran is simple to understand (54:11). Whoever opens his/her mind and heart as a monotheist and takes the time to study it, will understand it. This understanding will be enough for salvation. Beyond this, to understand the multiple-meaning verses you do not need to be a messenger of God. If you have a good mind and have studied the Quran as a believer, that is, if you have a deep knowledge, then you will be able to understand the true meanings of multiple-meaning verses. The verse 3:7, which is about the multiple-meaning verses, points this fact in a multiple-meaning way (this is an interesting subject warranting another article): ". . . No one knows their true meaning except God and those who possess knowledge. . ."

Edip-Layth - End Note 8 (16:49)

The human body, whether belonging to an appreciative or unappreciative person, as a whole has peacefully surrendered to its Creator, and thus is a muslim (submitter/peaceful surrenderer to God). It is true that SaJDa means obedience, submission to God's law (16:49). From this verse we should not necessarily infer that everything has a mind like humans. Even if we subscribe to such a fancy assumption, mental events too are physical events; they are the consequence of interactions of electrons. In fact, the prostration of all the creatures we perceive is physical. Any event that can be sensed by our five senses is a physical event. Atoms peacefully surrender to God's laws when they interact with each other. When water freezes it peacefully surrenders to God's law and expands; when it is heated to a certain degree it evaporates. When Hydrogen, Carbon, Nitrogen, and Oxygen atoms come together in a particular order and create bases called Adenine, Cytosine, Guanine, and Thymine, and when these bases join each other in a particular order, pre-ordained by God, they create DNAs that produce new qualities and events, including life. Every cell and organ in our bodies submits to God's law. These are all physical demonstration of SaJDa to God. No wonder, the entire universe is stated to have submitted to God (3:83; 13:15). Interestingly, in these two verses the same idea is depicted yet in 3:83 the verb aSLaMa (submitted) is used while in 13:15 the verb yaSJuD (prostrating) is used. This is strong evidence that both verbs belong to the same semantic field. As we know, submission to God is not just a mental activity but also a physical action, such as working hard, delivering God's message, feeding the poor, etc. The word SaJDa in some verses means ONLY mental (in quantum, electronic or neural level) prostration while in other verses it means ONLY bodily (atomic and molecular level) prostration. The prostration mentioned in 27:20-24 must be bodily, and the one in verse 77:48 most likely refers to mental prostration. As for verse 22:18, it describes both mental and bodily submission to God. One might argue, "Has anyone ever seen any of these creations bow and prostrate on the ground (animals excluded)? Since all things in heavens and earth do not prostrate to God by casting themselves face down on the ground in humility, then we should not prostrate that way either." This conclusion is based on a false assumption that ALL creatures prostrate the same way.

Every creature in the heavens and the earth glorifies God (24:41; 57:1; 59:1,24; 61:1; 62:1; 64:1). But we do not understand their glorification (17:44). We are also instructed to glorify our Lord day and night, not like birds or planets, but like humans, in our language and according to our natural design (3:41; 5:98; 7:206; 19:11; 20:130; 32:15; 40:55; 50:39-40; 52:48-49; 56:74,96; 69:52; 76:26; 87:1; 110:3). Hence: "Do you not see that everything in the heavens and the earth glorify God, including the birds in columns. Each knows his/her/its prayer (sala) and glorification. God is fully aware of everything you do." (24:41). The following verse is also important: "Are they seeking other than God's religion, when everything has submitted (aSLaMa) to Him in the heavens and the earth, willingly or unwillingly, and to Him they will be returned?" (3:83). Now those who reject that sala prayer includes bodily bowing and prostration should ask a similar question about how to be a muslim just as they ask about how to perform prostration: "Has anyone ever seen any of these creations give charity or deliver God's message or study the Quran?" So, according to those who deny that we must both mentally and bodily prostrate for God, we should not give charity, should not deliver the message, should not study the Quran, and should not use computers?!! One might refer to 2:62 and ask: "No, not all of the mentioned people bow and prostrate on the ground. Will they be punished? No, it is the people who do not submit to the God and follow His commands that will deserve His punishment." This is a hasty conclusion. The groups mentioned in the verse (believers, Jews, Nazarenes, and those from other religions) attain salvation as long as they believe in God, do righteous work and believe in the hereafter. Perhaps not all these groups bow and prostrate, and perhaps not all these groups believe and follow the Quran, either. First, we should remember that God holds each responsible depending on their circumstances. As those who witnessed Moses' miracles will be held responsible for their reaction to them, similarly those who are instructed to bow and prostrate will be held responsible for their reaction. Each nation received a messenger and each received their instruction (10:47; 22:34; 40:28). Referring to verse 18:50, one might conclude: "There is no need to get on the ground to worship your Lord because He has not commanded us to do this. He wants us to bow and prostrate our wills to that of His will." This is a reasonable conclusion. However, knowing that the word prostration was also used to mean humbly getting on the ground, we cannot equate the prostration in this verse to all others. The verse refers to an event which took place before the creation of life on earth. Besides, the instruction is to Satan, a creature made of energy, not matter like us. The nature of the prostration asked of Satan or the angels might be a little different than the one asked of us; or, more accurately, the form, way or style of our prostration might not necessarily be expected to be the same as that of the angels. David, who was observing sala prayer, is described by the Quran as: " He then implored his Lord for forgiveness, bowed down (KhaRra RuKka'An), and repented." (38:24). David's repentance is clearly described as bowing down, both mentally and bodily. We should remind those who are trying hard to eliminate the formal component of sala prayer of the following verse: " When the revelations of the Gracious are recited to them, they fall prostrate (KhaRRu SuJjaDan), weeping" (19:58). See 41:37; 13:15; 3:83.

It is up to us to benefit from God's blessings or get harmed by abusing them. We can use nuclear energy to destroy cities or to generate electricity; we can burn our hands in fire or cook our food with

Besides containing numerous vitamins and nutrients, honey is also considered a medicine for some allergies. Pure natural honey is known to be the only food that will never spoil; thus it is called "miracle food." In low humidity, no organism can live in it and it never decomposes. If it crystallizes, warming it up and mixing it will restore its original texture. Bees are superb architects and engineers; they design and manufacture their honeycomb in hexagonal shapes, which provide optimal efficiency in using wax. Bees are brilliant pharmacists; they produce medicine called honey and poison made of acid and alkaline in their labs. Bees are excellent navigators and talented choreographers; they communicate the distance, the amount, and the direction of flowers, by dancing. Bees are admirable citizens; they work together with thousands of other bees in overpopulated hives in peace and harmony. Bees have great work ethics; they work hard and do not cheat each other. Bees are both pilots and suicide stinger jets; they strike bravely those who occupy their territories. (Fortunately, they are incapable of protecting their hard-earned product from being stolen by us). This little insect, with so many qualities bestowed by its Creator, provides us with many signs and lessons. The Bible contains numerous references to honey and bees. It is found in rocks, (Deuteronomy 32:13; Psalms 81:16); woods (1 Samuel 14:25-26); and strangely, in carcasses of dead animals (Judges 14:8). Its sweetness and nutritional value is praised (Proverbs 16:24; 24:13; 25:16,27); was eaten together with other nutrients, including locusts (Matthew 3:4; Mark 1:6); was used as a religious offering (2Chronians 31:5); and honey was likened to wisdom and nice words (Proverbs 16:24; Proverbs 24:13-14); to the word of God (Psalms 19:10; 119:103); and to the lips of a strange woman (Proverbs 5:3). Holy books besides the Quran have been tampered by clergymen. If we compare the Old and New Testaments, the originality of the Quran will become evident. For instance, compare Quran's 2:93 with the Bible's Exodus 32:20; or compare Quran's 11:40-44 to the Bible's Genesis, Chapters 6-8 and 1Peter 3:18-20; 2Peter 2:5; 2Pe 3:6. Dr. Maurice Bucaille's book, "The Bible, The Quran and Science" contains numerous comparisons between the Quran and the Bible. (See 95:2). The term ruh (lit., "spirit", "soul" or "breath of life") is often used in the Qur'an in the sense of "inspiration" - and, more particularly, "divine inspiration" - since, as Zamakhshari points out in connection with the above verse as well as with the first sentence of 42:52, "it gives life to hearts that were [as] dead in their ignorance, and has in religion the same function as a soul has in a body". A very similar explanation is given by Razi in the same context. The earliest instance in which the term ruh has been used in this particular sense is 97:4.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 3 (16:3)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 5 (16:4)

Lit., "he becomes an open contender in argument (khasim)". According to Zamakhshari and Razi, the above phrase is liable to two interpretations: 'In the words of Zamakhshari, "one interpretation is that after having been a (mere) drop of sperm, a particle of matter without consciousness or motion, man becomes highly articulate (mintiq); able to argue on his own [for or against a proposition], courageously facing-disputes, and clearly formulating his arguments: [and herein lies] an indication of God's creative power. The., other -[interpretation] is that man is [prone to become] a contender in `argument against his.' Sustainer, refusing to acknowledge his [very] Creator." Razi, on his part, gives his. unqualified. support' to the first of these two interpretations, "because the above verses -are meant .to stress the evidence of the existence of a wise Creator, and not the ;fact of men's insolence and their proneness to blasphemy and ingratitude". However, in view of 36:77-78 ('revealed at a considerably earlier period), I am of the opinion that the above two interpretations are not mutually: exclusive but, rather, complementary, inasmuch as this passage' is meant to bring out man's unique quality as a rational being -a quality that may lead him to great heights. of achievement, but may equally well lead him utterly astray: hence my free rendering of this_ profound elliptic phrase.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 6 (16:8)

The use, in this context, of the aorist yakhluqu implies the future tense ("He will create") in contrast with the past tense khalaqa employed in the-preceding passages. Since this reference to God's continuing creation comes immediately after, a mention of primitive means of transport (i.e., of animals domesticated by man to this end), it-obviously relates to other-as yet unknown-things of the same category: that is to say, to new means of transport which God unceasingly creates through the instrumentality of the inventiveness with which He has endowed man's mind (cf. 36:42). Inasmuch as every successive stage of human development bears witness to new, previously undreamt-of inventions in the realm of transport, the Qur'anic statement that "He will yet create things of which [today] you have no knowledge" is valid for every period - past, present and future - of man's history.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 7 (16:9)

Lit., "upon God rests the [showing of the] goal of the path" - i.e., the establishing of the goals of ethics and morality implied in the concept of the "right path". In further analysis of this phrase, the expression "it rests upon God" (`ala 'llah) is similar in intent to the statement in 6:12 and 54 that He "has willed upon Himself the law of grace and mercy": in other words, God invariably shows the right path to everyone who is willing to follow it.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 8 (16:9)

Since the concept of morality is linked with man's God-given freedom of choice between good and evil, God does not "impose" His guidance upon man but leaves it to him to accept or reject it.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 9 (16:12)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 11 (16:15)

This is apparently an allusion to the fact that the mountains owe their rise to the gradual balancing process to which the solid crust of the earth is subject -a process which, in its turn, is the result of stresses and disturbances due to the cooling and hardening, progressing from the -surface towards the centre, of the presumably molten or perhaps even gaseous matter of which the earth's interior seems to be composed. It appears that part of this interior is kept solid only by the enormous pressure of the overlaying material, of which the mountains are the most vivid evidence: and this explains the Qur'anic reference (in 78:7) to mountains as "pegs" (awtad), i.e., symbols of the firmness and relative equilibrium which the surface of the earth has gradually achieved in the course of its geological history. Notwithstanding the fact that this equilibrium is not absolute (as is evidenced by earthquakes and volcanic eruptions), it is the solidity of the earth's crust - as contrasted with its possibly fluid but certainly very unstable interior - which makes life on earth possible: and this, to my mind, is the meaning of the phrase "lest it sway with you" (or "with them") occurring in the above verse as well as in 21:31 and 31:10.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 12 (16:16)

Lit., "they find their way". See 6:10 and the corresponding note. Similar phrases occur in many places in the Qur'an, always with reference to a derision of divine messages and, particularly, of predictions relating to God's chastisement of reprobate sinners. As so often, the Qur'an points out here that this "chastisement" or "suffering" (`adhab) is but a natural, unavoidable consequence of deliberate wrongdoing: hence, he who becomes guilty of it is, in reality, "doing wrong to himself" or "sinning against himself" inasmuch as he destroys his own spiritual integrity and must subsequently suffer for it.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 31 (16:35)

(The arbitrary, unwarranted prohibitions and taboos alluded to in that verse as well as in the present one are discussed in 6:136-153 and explained in my notes.) The derision of God's messages by the deniers of the truth is implied in their questioning His grant of free will to man - that is to say, the ability to choose between right and wrong, which is the basis of all morality.

For this rendering of the term at-taghut, see surah 2, note 250. It is to be borne in mind that, in Qur'anic terminology, "worship of God" invariably implies the concept of man's sense of responsibility before Him: hence, the above commandment comprises, in the most concise formulation imaginable, the sum-total of all ethical injunctions and prohibitions, and is the basis and source of all morality as well as the one unchanging message inherent in every true religion.

This categorical denial of resurrection-implying as it does a denial of God's ultimate judgment of good and evil - is characteristic of a mental attitude which refuses to admit the reality, or even possibility, of anything that lies beyond the range of man's actual or potential observation. Since such an attitude is an outcome of an intrinsically materialistic outlook on life and the "false pride" referred to in verses 22-23 above, it is anti-religious in the deepest sense of this word even if it is accompanied by a vague - because_ non-consequential - belief in the existence of God.

This passage has a double purport: firstly, it connects with the statement enunciated in verse 36 to the effect that God's apostles have appeared, at one time or another, within every civilization, and that, consequently, no substantial human groupment has ever been left without divine guidance; secondly, it answers the objection frequently raised by unbelievers that Muhammad could not be God's message-bearer since he was "a mere mortal man". (As regards the Qur'anic doctrine that no created being, not even a prophet, has ever been endowed with "supernatural" powers or qualities, see 6:50 and 7:188, as well as the notes relating to those verses; also note 94 on 6:109.)

I.e., in the midst of their habitual occupations. My interpolation of the word "suddenly" is warranted by the reference, in the next verse, to the alternative of gradual decay.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 52 (16:47)

One of the meanings of takhawwuf is "gradual diminution" or "decay" or "slow destruction" (Lisan al'Arab, art. khawafa; thus also Tabari and Zamakhshari); in the above context, the term has obviously both a social and a moral connotation: a gradual disintegration of all ethical values, of power, of civic cohesion, of happiness and, finally, of life itself.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 53 (16:47)

Sc., "seeing that He offers you guidance through His prophets, and gives you time to reflect and mend your ways before you do irreparable harm to yourselves".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 54 (16:48)

In view of the separate mention, in the next verse, of animals and angels, the "things" referred to here apparently denote inanimate objects and perhaps also living organisms like plants.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 55 (16:48)

Lit., "and they are utterly lowly" or "submissive". The "prostration" referred to in this and the next verse is obviously a symbolism expressing the intrinsic subjection of all created beings and things to God's will. See also 13:15 and the corresponding notes 33 and 34.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 56 (16:49)

I.e., the lowest as well as the highest. The term dabbah denotes any sentient, corporeal being capable of spontaneous movement, and is contrasted here with the non-corporeal, spiritual beings designated as "angels" (Razi).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 57 (16:50)

I.e., they must, by virtue of their nature, obey the impulses implanted in them by God and are, therefore, incapable of what is described as "sinning". Man, however, is fundamentally different in this respect. In contrast with the natural sinlessness of "every beast that moves, and the angels", man is endowed with free will in the moral sense of this term: he can choose between right and wrong and therefore he can, and often does, sin. But even while he sins he is subject to the universal law of cause and effect instituted by God and referred to in the Qur'an as sunnat Allah ("God's way"): hence the Qur'anic statement that "before God prostrate themselves, willingly or unwillingly, all [things and beings] that are in the heavens and on earth" (13:15).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 58 (16:51)

The double dual in ilahayn ithnayn ("two deities") serves to emphasize the prohibition of worshipping "more than one deity"-i.e., anything but the One God.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 59 (16:51)

This is a striking example of the fluctuation to which personal pronouns are subjected in the Qur'an whenever they refer to God. As already pointed out in my Foreword, note 2. as well as in other places, such abrupt changes of pronoun ("He", "I", "We", "Us", "Me", etc.) indicate that God is limitless and, therefore, beyond the range of definition implied in the use of "personal" pronouns.

Muhammad Asad - End Note (16:53)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 61 (16:54)

Lit., "associate [other powers] with their Sustainer": i.e., by attributing the change in their "luck" to what they regard as "extraneous" factors and influences, they invest the latter, as it were, with divine qualities and powers.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 62 (16:56)

According to most of the classical commentators, this relates to the custom of the pagan Arabs - mentioned in 6:136 - to dedicate a part of their agricultural produce and cattle to their deities; and because those deities were mere figments of imagination, they are described here as "things of which they know nothing". However, as I have pointed out in note 120 on 6:136, the above statement bears a much wider, more general meaning: it connects directly with the three preceding verses of this surah - namely, with the attribution of a share (nasib) in God's creativeness - and thus of a decisive influence on one's life - to "causes" or "powers" other than Him. This view has also been advanced by Razi (with a specific reference to astrological speculations) in the concluding sentence of his commentary on the above verse.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 63 (16:57)

The pre-Islamic Arabs believed that the goddesses Al-Lat, Al-`Uzza and Manat (see note 13 on 53:19-20), as well as the angels, whom they conceived as females, were "God's daughters". As against this, the Qur'an states that God is utterly remote from every imperfection (subhanahu), complete in Himself, and therefore free from the incompleteness inherent in the concept of "progeny" as an extension of one's own being (cf. 6:100 and the corresponding notes 87 and 88). This parenthetical passage, comprising verses 57-59, is explained in note 66 below.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 64 (16:57)

Namely, only male issue, because the pre-Islamic Arabs regarded daughters as no more than a necessary evil.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 65 (16:58)

I.e., a tiding that should have been regarded as a happy one, since the sex of the child ought to make no difference to parental love.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 66 (16:59)

I.e., either of these alternatives is evil: to keep the child as an object of perpetual contempt, or to bury it alive, as was frequently done by the pagan Arabs.-This passage, containing as it does an utter condemnation of men's attitude towards women in pre-Islamic Arabia, has - as is always the case with Qur'anic references to historical events or customs - a meaning that goes far beyond this specific social phenomenon and the resulting infanticide. It would seem that the pivotal point of the whole passage is the sentence, "for themselves [they would choose, if they could, only] what they desire": that is to say, while they are only too ready to associate with God ideas which are repugnant to themselves (for instance, female progeny, which they themselves despise), they are unwilling to accept the concept of man's ultimate responsibility to Him, because such a concept militates against their own hedonistic inclinations by obliging them to impose a moral discipline on themselves. And because they rebel against the idea of ultimate moral responsibility, they instinctively reject the idea of resurrection and of life after bodily death; and since they deny, by implication, God's power to resurrect the dead, they deny His omnipotence and, consequently, begin to "ascribe divinity" - i.e., a genuinely causative function - to all manner of imaginary forces, beings or influences: and so, by means of a parenthetical reference to pre-Islamic Arabian beliefs and customs, the discourse returns full circle to the concept of God's oneness, uniqueness and omnipotence, around which the whole of the Qur'an revolves.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 67 (16:60)

I.e., inasmuch as they deny, by implication, man's ultimate responsibility before God. According to Zamakhshari and Razi, the term mathal (lit., "example" or "parable") has here and in the next clause the connotation of sifah ("attribute").

Muhammad Asad - End Note 68 (16:61)

Or: "known [only to Him]" - i.e., the period of their lives on earth, during which they may reflect and repent.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 69 (16:61)

For my rendering of sa'ah as "a single moment", see surah 7, note 26.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 70 (16:62)

I.e., "daughters" (see verses 57-59 above): but this alludes also, as Zamakhshari points out, to the association with God of imaginary beings which allegedly have a share in His power and thus nullify the concept of His uniqueness: in other words, while the people spoken of here would hate to see their own legitimate spheres of influence encroached upon and curtailed by rivals, they do not extend the same consideration to their idea of God.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 71 (16:62)

Lit., "that theirs is the supreme good (al-husna)" - i.e., in the sight of God - because they regard their own religious or anti-religious views, in spite of their absurdity, as good and true'. This interpretation of al-husna in the above context (mentioned, among others, by Zamakhshari and Razi) connects logically with the statement in the next verse that "Satan had made their own doings seem goodly to them"

Muhammad Asad - End Note 72 (16:62)

Lit., "theirs [or "their portion"] will be the fire, and they will be abandoned".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 73 (16:63)

Or: "He is their patron [or "master"] today": It should be borne in mind that the noun wali is derived from the verb waliya, which primarily signifies "he was [or "became"] close [or "near", i.e., to someone or something]". It is in this sense that the term wali is used in the Qur'an with reference to God's nearness to the believers (e.g., in 2:257 or 3:68), or their nearness to God (see 10:62 and the corresponding note 84). Similarly, the "powers of evil" (at-taghut) are spoken of in 2:257 as being "near unto those who are bent on denying the truth (alladhina kafaru)".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 74 (16:65)

As so often in the Qur'an, a reference to the spiritual life engendered by divine revelation is followed here by a reference to the miracle of organic life as another indication of God's creative activity.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 75 (16:66)

Milk-in itself a glandular secretion-is not necessary for the mother-animal's life (or, as it is here metonymically described, its "blood"); on the other hand, it is not just something that the body eliminates as being of no further use to its metabolism: hence it is referred to as a substance "between that which is to be eliminated [from the animal's body] and [its] life-blood".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 76 (16:67)

The term sakar (lit., "wine" or, generically, "intoxicants") is contrasted here with rizq hasan ("wholesome sustenance"), thus circumscribing both the positive and the negative properties and effects of alcohol. Although this surah was revealed about ten years before the Qur'anic prohibition of intoxicants in 5:90-91, there is no doubt that their moral condemnation is already implied in the above verse (Ibn `Abbas, as quoted by Tabari; also Razi).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 77 (16:68)

The expression "He has inspired" (awha) is meant to bring out the wonderful quality of the instinct which enables the lowly insect to construct the geometrical masterpiece of a honeycomb out of perfectly-proportioned hexagonal, prismatic wax cells - a structure which is most economical, and therefore most rational, as regards space and material. Together with the subsequently mentioned transmutation, in the bee's body, of plant juices into honey, this provides a striking evidence of "God's ways" manifested in all nature.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 78 (16:69)

Lit., "thy Sustainer's paths".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 79 (16:70)

Lit., "is reduced to a most abject age, so that he knows nothing after [having had] knowledge": alluding to the organic curve of man's growth, his acquisition of bodily strength, intelligence and experience, followed by gradual decay and, in some cases, the utter helplessness of senility, comparable to the helplessness of a new-born child.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 80 (16:71)

The phrase "to share their sustenance with.. .", etc., reads, literally, "to turn over their sustenance to". The expression "those whom their right hands possess" (i.e., "those whom they rightfully possess") may relate either to slaves taken captive in a war in God's cause (see surah 2, notes 167 and 168, and surah 8, note 72) or, metonymically, to all who are dependent on others for their livelihood and thus become the latter's responsibility. The placing of one's dependants on an equal footing with oneself with regard to the basic necessities of life is a categorical demand of Islam; thus, the Prophet said:

"They are your brethren, these dependants of yours (khawalukum) whom God has placed under your authority [lit., "under your hand"]. Hence, whoso has his brother under his authority shall give him to eat of what he eats himself, and shall clothe him with what he clothes himself. And do not burden them with anything that may be beyond their strength; but if you [must] burden them, help them yourselves." (This authentic Tradition, recorded by Bukhari in several variants in his Sahih, appears in the compilations of Muslim, Tirmidhi and Ibn Hanbalas well.) However, men often fail to live up to this consciousness of moral responsibility: and this failure amounts, as the sequence shows, to a denial of God's blessings and of His unceasing care for all His creatures.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 81 (16:72)

Lit., "has made [or "provided"] for you mates out of yourselves". The term zawj denotes not only "a pair" or "a couple" but also - as in this instance - "one of a pair" or "a mate" of the opposite sex; hence, with reference to human beings, the plural azwaj signifies both "husbands" and "wives".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 82 (16:72)

Lit., "they", i.e., those who deny the truth of God's existence and/or oneness.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 83 (16:73)

For the comprehensive meaning embodied in the term rizq, see the first sentence e1; note 4 on 2:3.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 84 (16:74)

Le., "do not blaspheme against God by regarding anyone or anything as comparable with Him, or by trying to define Him in any terms whatsoever" - since "definition" is, in the last resort, equivalent to a delimitation of the qualities of the object thus to be defined in relation to, or in comparison with, another object or objects: God, however, is "sublimely exalted above anything that men may devise by way of definition" (see last sentence of 6:100, and the corresponding note 88).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 85 (16:75)

The obvious answer is that they cannot. The implication is equally clear: if even these two kinds of man cannot be deemed equal, how could any created being, with its intrinsic, utter dependence on other created beings, or any force of nature conceivable or imaginable by man, be thought of as possessing powers comparable with those of God, who is almighty, limitless, unconceivable-the self-sufficient fount of all that exists? (This argument is continued and further elaborated in the subsequent parable.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 86 (16:76)

The term abkam signifies "dumb" both in the literal, physiological sense and (as in colloquial English) in the sense of being "unable to speak properly" on account of intellectual weakness: i.e., "dull-witted" or "stupid". Both these meanings are contained in the above Qur'anic description.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 87 (16:76)

Or: "wherever he sends him".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 88 (16:76)

I.e., who is not only wise and righteous but also has the strength and authority to enjoin a righteous way of living upon others. Thus, while in the first parable the main issue is the contrast between freedom and bondage or - more generally - between dependence and independence, in the second parable we are given the antithesis of dumbness and incompetence, on the one hand, and wisdom, justice and competence, on the other; and in both parables the implication is the same (see note 85 above).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 89 (16:77)

This passage connects with the second sentence of verse 74 - "Verily, God knows [all], whereas you have no [real] knowledge."

Muhammad Asad - End Note 90 (16:77)

As may be inferred from the sequence, the term ghayb - rendered here as the "hidden reality" - alludes in this context to the coming of the Last Hour, the time whereof is known to God alone (Zamakhshari). Parallel with this, it may also relate to God's Own existence, which cannot be directly established by the testimony of our senses (Baydawi) but, as the Qur'an consistently points out, may be inferred from the observable effects of His creativeness.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 91 (16:77)

Lit., "the case (i.e., the manifestation) of the [Last] Hour will be like...", etc. - implying that it will be characterized by utter suddenness and unpredictability, both of them an outcome of the absence of any time-interval between God's decreeing it and its materialization: and this explains the phrase "or closer still" at the end of the above sentence.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 92 (16:79)

Lit., "subservient [to God's laws] in the air of the sky".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 93 (16:80)

The term julud (sing. jild) denotes, literally, "skins", but apparently comprises here also the wool which grows on the skins of domesticated animals. It is to be noted that in Arabian usage the noun bayt ("house") signifies not only a solid building but also a "tent" - in brief, every kind of dwelling, whether permanent or temporary.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 94 (16:80)

Wabar (here given in its plural, awbar) is the soft wool growing on the shoulders of camels ("camel-hair"), used in the weaving of fine cloths and sometimes also of bedouin tents.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 95 (16:81)

Lit., "out of that which He has created".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 96 (16:81)

. Lit., "shades (zilah. sing., zilah). Metonymically, this term is occasionally used to describe anything that "shades" one in the sense of protecting him; and since the sequence clearly refers to means of protection, I believe that this derivative meaning of zilah is here preferable to the literal.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 97 (16:81)

According to almost all the classical commentators, the mention of "heat" implies here its opposite as well, namely "cold"; hence my interpolation.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 98 (16:81)

According to most of the commentators, the second incidence of the term "garments" (sarabil) in this verse is to be understood as "coats of mail" or "armour", in which case it would allude to wars and other instances of mutual violence. But although this interpretation cannot be ruled out, it seems to me that the second mention of "garments" can be understood in a much wider sense, perhaps metonymically denoting all manner of "coverings" (i.e., devices meant to protect the body) which man may be constrained to use in dangerous situations of his own making: hence the stress on "your violence" (ba'sakum).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 99 (16:83)

I.e., although they are aware of the many blessings which man enjoys, they refuse to attribute them to God's creative activity, thus implicitly denying the truth of His existence. My rendering of al-kafirun as "[such as] are given to denying the truth" is conditioned by the definite article al which, in the above construction, is meant to stress the quality of deliberate intent.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 100 (16:84)

An allusion to the Day of Judgment, when the prophets whom God has called forth within every community - or, in the wider sense of the term ummah, within every civilization or cultural period - will symbolically bear witness to the fact that they had delivered God's message to their people and explained to them the meaning of right and wrong, thus depriving them of any subsequent excuse.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 101 (16:84)

According to Zamakhshari, their being "refused permission" to plead is a metonym for their having no valid argument or excuse to proffer. (Cf. also 77:35-36.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 102 (16:86)

Cf. 6:22 and the corresponding note 15.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 103 (16:86)

The Qur'an states in many places that every sinner who dies without repentance will be endowed on Judgment Day with a clear, objectified vision of his sins, every one of which will have assumed for him the status of an independent reality bearing witness against him and forcing him to acknowledge his now irremediable guilt. It is to be remembered in this connection that the Qur'an describes every act of sinning - whether it be an offence against the concept of God's oneness and uniqueness or a wrong done to any of His creatures - as, primarily, one's "wronging oneself" or "sinning against oneself".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 104 (16:86)

Cf. 6:23-24 and the corresponding notes 16 and 17.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 105 (16:89)

See note 100 above.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 106 (16:89)

Although the Arabian contemporaries of the Prophet were, naturally, the first to whom his revelation was conveyed - a fact that gave a particular weight to the manner in which they responded to it - the Qur'anic message as such is addressed to all mankind (see in this connection, in particular, 7:158 and 21:107, as well as the corresponding notes).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 107 (16:89)

Le., everything that pertains to the knowledge of good and evil, in both the individual and social senses of these terms. - Regarding my rendering of nazzalna, it should be borne in mind that this particular grammatical form is often used in the Qur'an to bring out the fact that it was revealed gradually ("step by step") over a considerable period of time, and not in one piece.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 108 (16:90)

Lit., "the giving to [one's] kinsfolk (dhu 'l-qurba)". The latter term usually denotes "relatives", either by blood or by marriage; but since it occurs here in the context of a comprehensive ethical exhortation, it obviously alludes to man's "kinsfolk" in the widest sense of the term, namely, to his "fellow-men".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 109 (16:90)

The term al-munkar (rendered by me in other places as "that which is wrong") has here its original meaning of "that which the mind [or the moral sense] rejects", respectively "ought to reject". Zamakhshari is more specific, and explains this term as signifying in the above context "that which [men's] intellects disown" or "declare to be untrue" (ma tunkiruhu al-'uqul): in other words, all that runs counter to reason and good sense (which, obviously, must not be confused with that which is beyond man's comprehension). This eminently convincing explanation relates not merely to intellectually unacceptable propositions (in the abstract sense of the term) but also to grossly unreasonable and, therefore, reprehensible actions or attitudes and is, thus, fully in tune with the rational approach of the Qur'an to questions of ethics as well as with its insistence on reasonableness and moderation in man's behaviour. Hence my rendering-of al-munkar, in this and in similar instances, as "all that runs counter to reason".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 110 (16:91)

Regarding the expression "bond with God" ('ahd Allah), see surah 2, note 19. The clause "whenever you bind yourselves by a pledge" has a twofold meaning: in the first instance (as in 13:20) it refers to the spiritual, moral and social obligations arising from one's faith in God; and, secondly, it applies to all pledges or promises given by one person to another-for, as Razi points out, every pledge given by man to man represents, in its essence, a pledge to God. It is to this second aspect of man's "bond with God" that the sequence refers.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 111 (16:91)

Le., as distinct from oaths "uttered without thought" (see 2:225).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 112 (16:91)

Lit., "and having made God [or "named God as"] your guarantor (kafil)".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 113 (16:92)

Lit., "as a [means of] deception (dakhalan) among yourselves".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 114 (16:92)

Lit., "because there are people (ummah) more powerful than [other] people": relating to declarations and false promises made out of fear.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 115 (16:92)

As is evident from the preceding passage as well as from the sequence, the differences alluded to here relate to ethical and moral values, regarding the truth and relevance of which people of various communities and persuasions hold most divergent views. See also surah 2, note 94.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 116 (16:93)

I.e., bound by mutually agreed-upon moral values. See in this connection 10:19 and the corresponding notes, especially note 29. For an elucidation of the concept of ummah wahidah ("one single community") and its further implications, see surah 2, notes 197 and 198.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 117 (16:93)

Or: "He lets go astray whomever He wills, and guides aright whomever He wills". Regarding the problem of free will versus predestination, seemingly implied in the concept of God's "letting man go [or "causing him to go"] astray" or, alternatively, "guiding him aright", see surah 14, note 4.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 118 (16:93)

Alluding to the erroneous idea that man's good or evil actions -and therefore also his propensities and resulting attitudes -are "predetermined" by God and not really an outcome of free choice, Zamakhshari rounds off his views on this problem (quoted by me in surah 14, note 4) in these words: "If [it were true that] God compels [men] to astray or, alternatively, to follow His guidance-why should He have postulated their deeds as something for which they will be held responsible?"

Muhammad Asad - End Note 119 (16:94)

Le., "you will offend against God after having attained to faith", seeing that-as has been pointed out in note 110 above-every pledge given by man to man is synonymous with a pledge to God.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 120 (16:94)

I.e., in this world (Tabari, Zamakhshari, Baydawi), inasmuch as the breaking of pledges unavoidably leads to a gradual disappearance of all mutual trust and, thus, to the decomposition of the social fabric.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 121 (16:97)

This may relate either to life in this world-inasmuch as a true believer invariably finds happiness in his God-consciousness - or to the happiness which awaits him in the hereafter, or to both.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 122 (16:98)

The present passage (verses 98-105) evidently connects with the broad ethical exhortation given in verse 90 above and, thus, with the statement (in verse 89) that the Qur'an is meant "to make everything clear and to provide guidance and grace and a glad tiding unto all who have surrendered themselves to God" - which, in its turn, implies that the Qur'an is the ultimate source of all God-willed ethical and moral values, and thus an unchanging criterion of good and evil. But since man is always, by virtue of his nature, prone to question the very validity of the moral standards established through revelation, the believer is now called upon to seek, whenever he reads or meditates on this divine writ, God's spiritual aid against the whisperings of what the Qur'an describes as "Satan, the accursed"-that is, all the evil forces, both within man's own soul and within his social environment, which tend to undermine his moral convictions and to lead him away from God.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 123 (16:100)

Or: "who make him their master". Cf. in this connection 14:22 and the corresponding note 31.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 124 (16:100)

Le., inasmuch as they pay an almost worshipful reverence to such blandishments as wealth, power, social position, etc.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 125 (16:101)

Le., by substituting the message of the Qur'an for the earlier dispensations - and not, as some Muslim scholars maintain, "abrogating" one Qur'anic verse and replacing it by another. (Regarding the untenable "doctrine of abrogation", in the latter sense, see 2:106 and the corresponding note 87; see also note 35 on 41:42.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 126 (16:101)

Le., the gradualness of revelation (implied in the verbal form yunazzil) corresponds to God's plan, according to which He has gradually unfolded His will to man, substituting one dispensation for another in the measure of mankind's intellectual and social development, bringing it to its culmination in the message of the Qur'an.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 127 (16:101)

Le., they do not understand the necessity of a new dispensation and, therefore, do not really understand the Qur'an.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 128 (16:102)

As in the three other places in which the expression ruh al-qudus occurs (2:87 and 253, and 5:110), I am rendering it here, too, as "holy inspiration" (see surah 2, note 71), a term which, to my mind, is a Qur'anic synonym for "divine revelation". However, a literal rendering-"spirit of holiness" -is also possible if one applies this term to the angel who communicates God's revelations to the prophets. (See also verse 2 of this surah and the corresponding note 2.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 129 (16:103)

I.e., to Muhammad - thus insinuating that his claim to divine revelation was false.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 130 (16:103)

Whereas some of the pagan Quraysh regarded the ideas expressed in the Qur'an as "invented" by Muhammad, others thought that they must have been imparted to him by a foreigner - perhaps a Christian - who lived in Mecca at that time, or whom the Prophet was supposed to have encountered at an earlier period of his life. Various conjectures have been advanced - both by early Muslim commentators and by modern orientalists - as to the "identity" of the person or persons whom the suspicious Meccans might have had in mind in this connection; but all these conjectures are purely speculative and, therefore, of no historical value whatever. The suspicion of the pagan Meccans implies no more than the historical fact that those of the Prophet's opponents who were unwilling to pay him the compliment of having "invented" the Qur'an (the profundity of which they were unable to deny) conveniently attributed its authorship or at least its inspiration to a mythical non-Arab "teacher" of the Prophet.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 131 (16:103)

For an explanation of this composite rendering of the descriptive term mubin, see surah 12, note 2. 'the term is used here to stress the fact that no human being-and certainly no non-Arab -could ever have produced the flawless, exalted Arabic diction in which the Qur'an is expressed.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 132 (16:105)

I.e., the scurrilous allegation referred to in verse 103. Although this statement alludes, in the first instance, to the hostile contemporaries of the Prophet, it extends, by obvious implication, to people of all times who refuse to believe in the reality of Muhammad's revelations, and try to explain them away as obsessive illusions or even as deliberate fabrications.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 133 (16:106)

Lit., "except" - but the Arabic construction of the sentence that follows makes it necessary to render the simple particle illa in the manner adopted by me ("and this, to be sure, does not apply to. . . , etc.).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 134 (16:106)

Lit., "one who is coerced, the while his heart is at rest in [his] faith". This relates to believers who, under torture or threat of death, ostensibly "recant" in order to save themselves. Although the Qur'an makes it clear in several places that martyrdom in the cause of faith is highly meritorious, "God does not burden any human being with more than he is well able to bear" (cf. 2:233 and 286, 6:152, 7:42, 23:62, and many other Qur'anic statements to the same effect).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 135 (16:108)

Sc., "of what is good and what is bad for them". -For an explanation of God's "sealing" the hearts of those who are bent on denying the truth, see 2:7 and the corresponding note.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 136 (16:110)

For an explanation of the concept of fitnah (appearing here in the verbal form futinu) and of my rendering it as "temptation to evil", see surah 8, note 25. As regards the expression alladhina hajarun in its spiritual connotation, see surah 2, note 203 and surah 4, note 124.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 137 (16:112)

Lit., "the garment" (libas)-idiomatically used in classical Arabic to describe the utmost degree of misfortune which "envelops man like a garment" (Taj al-'Arus, with specific reference to the above verse).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 138 (16:112)

This parable is meant to show that deliberate ingratitude for the manifold blessings which God bestows upon man - in other words, a deliberate refusal to submit to His guidance - is bound, in the long run and in the context of aggregate social life, to have disastrous consequences not only in the hereafter but in this world as well, inasmuch as no society may expect to live in security and ease unless it conforms to the ethical and social standards inherent in the concept of man's "bond with God" (as explained in surah 2, note 19).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 139 (16:114)

It is this call to gratitude that provides a connection between the present passage and the foregoing parable of the ungrateful town and, thus, with the opening passages (verses 1-15) of this surah.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 140 (16:115)

It is to be noted that the above two verses are almost identical with 2:172-173, and ought, therefore, to be read in conjunction with the whole passage of which those two verses form a part-namely, 2:168-173. Cf. also 6:145.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 141 (16:116)

Regarding the very important problem of an arbitrary determination, based on subjective preferences, of what is to be considered ethically right or wrong, see surah 2, note 137.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 142 (16:118)

I.e., in 6:146, revealed shortly before the present surah. The conjunctive particle "And" at the beginning of this sentence establishes a connection with the precept laid down in verse 114 above, "partake of all the lawful, good things which God has provided for you as sustenance": the implication being (as in 6:145) that none of the really good and wholesome things have been forbidden to the believer, and that the many dietary prohibitions and restrictions imposed on the Jews were imposed on them alone in punishment of their persistent sinning (cf. 3:93).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 143 (16:119)

For this rendering of thumma, see surah -6, note 31.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 144 (16:120)

This is one of the many meanings of the term ummah and, to my mind, the one most appropriate in the above context. - The mention of Abraham at this place contains a subtle allusion to verse 118, where the Jews are spoken of: for, the latter claim to be "the chosen people" on account of their descent from Abraham, whereas the Qur'an consistently rejects all claims to a special status by virtue of one's descent. Moreover, the Qur'an states in many places that whereas this particular ancestor of the Hebrews - and, by the way, of most of the Arab tribes as well - was a personification of all that is good and upright, so that "God exalted him with His love" (4:125), his Jewish descendants always tended to rebel against God and, thus, "persistently wronged themselves".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 145 (16:120)

For an explanation of this rendering of the term hanif, see surah 2, note 110.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 146 (16:123)

Lit., "thereafter" or "afterwards" (thumma): but since this particle evidently alludes here to the climax of all revelation as manifested in the Qur'an, the above rendering seems to be suitable.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 147 (16:124)

I.e., about Abraham. The implication is that the majority of the Jews had deviated from the true creed of Abraham (which is the meaning of the phrase, "those who came to hold divergent views about him") inasmuch as most of them became convinced that they were "God's chosen people" simply because of their physical descent from that great Prophet: an assumption which obviously runs counter to every truly religious principle. As the Qur'an repeatedly points out, this spiritual arrogance was punished by God's imposition on the children of Israel-and on them alone -of all manner of severe restrictions and rituals, of which the obligation to refrain from all work and even travel on the Sabbath was one. In its widest implication, this passage is meant to stress the fact that all God-imposed rituals are only a means towards the achievement of spiritual discipline, and never a religious goal in themselves.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 148 (16:124)

Le., He will judge between those who are convinced of their ultimate salvation on the basis of their alleged status of "God's chosen people", and those who believe in man's individual responsibility before God: and thus the discourse returns to the problem of God-consciousness and righteous living.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 149 (16:125)

Cf. 29:46 - "And do not argue with the followers of earlier revelation otherwise than in the most kindly manner". This stress on kindness and tact and, hence, on the use of reason alone in all religious discussions with adherents of other creeds is fully in tune with the basic, categorical injunction, "There shall be no coercion in matters of faith" (2:256).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 150 (16:126)

Lit., "retaliate [or "respond"] with the like of what you have been afflicted with": thus, the believers are admonished to observe self-restraint while arguing with people of another persuasion, and never to offend against decency and intellectual equity. Although retaliation in argument is permissible if one's integrity is impeached by an opponent, the sequence makes it clear that it is morally preferable to renounce it altogether and to bear the unjust attack with patience.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 151 (16:127)

Lit., "and thy patience in adversity (sabr) is due to (or. "ream with") none but God"-i.e., it must never be allowed to become a source of spiritual arrogance and false self-righteousness.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 152 (16:127)

Lit., "all that they are scheming", i.e., by inventing false and irrelevant arguments against God's messages.

Edip-Layth	17:13 We have attached every human's deeds to his own neck, and We bring forth for him a book on the day of Resurrection which he will find on display. ²
The Monotheist Group	17:13 And We have attached to every person's neck his deeds, and We bring forth for him a record on the Day of Resurrection which he will find on display.
Muhammad Asad	17:13 And every human being's destiny have We tied to his neck; ¹⁷ and on the Day of Resurrection We shall bring forth for him a record which he will find wide open;
Rashad Khalifa	The Video Tape 17:13 We have recorded the fate of every human being; it is tied to his neck. On the Day of Resurrection we will hand him a record that is accessible. ²
Shabbir Ahmed	17:13 All deeds of the humans are instantly recorded on their own 'self', as if the record book is fastened to their own necks. And We shall bring forth this record book wide open to them on the Day of Resurrection.

The Monotheist Group	17:60 And when We said to you: "Your Lord has encompassed the people." And We did not make the vision that We showed you except as a test for the people, and tree that was cursed in the Qur'an. And We are making them fearful, but it only increases their transgression.
Muhammad Asad	17:60 And lo! We said unto thee, [O Prophet:] "Behold, thy Sustainer encompasses all mankind [within His knowledge and might]: and so We have ordained that the vision which We have shown thee ⁷³ -as also the tree [of hell,] cursed in this Qur'an - shall be but a trial for men . ⁷⁴ Now [by Our mentioning hell] We convey a warning to them: but [if they are bent on denying the truth,] this [warning] only increases their gross, overweening arrogance."

Rashad Khalifa	17:60 We informed you that your Lord fully controls the people, and we rendered the vision that we showed you a test for the people, and the tree that is accursed in the Quran. We showed them solid proofs to instill reverence in them, but this only augmented their defiance.
Shabbir Ahmed	17:60 We said to you (O Prophet!), "Your Lord encompasses all mankind, so We have given you the vision." Those who hinder this Plan will end up eating the bitter, pungent Tree of Division that is mentioned in the Qur'an. This vision and the Tree of Division shall be a test for them. Now We have conveyed a warning to them, yet, for a time it shall increase them in great rebellion. 26

Muhammad Asad	17:82 THUS, step by step, We bestow from on high through this Qur'an all that gives health [to the spirit] and is a grace unto those who believe [in Us], the

	while it only adds to the ruin of evildoers: ⁹⁸
Rashad Khalifa	Healing and Mercy 17:82 We send down in the Quran healing and mercy for the believers. At the same time, it only increases the wickedness of the transgressors.
Shabbir Ahmed	17:82 Thus, step by step, We have sent down in the Qur'an the cure of all ills of humanity. It is a mercy for those who accept it. At the same time, it is a harbinger of loss for the oppressors (since it liberates the oppressed from their grasp). ³⁶

Muhammad Asad	17:83 for [it often happens that] when We bestow Our blessings upon man, he turns away and arrogantly keeps aloof [from any thought of Us]; and when evil fortune touches him, he abandons all hope. ⁹⁹
Rashad Khalifa	17:83 When we bless the human being, he becomes preoccupied and heedless. But when adversity strikes him, he turns despondent.

This verse confirms the Biblical verse Ezekiel 18:20. However, the Bible also contains verses claiming collective punishment: Exodus 20:5; Lamentations 5:7; Psalms 109:9-10.

Edip-Layth - End Note 4 (17:31)

The Arabic word we translated as "children" is aWLaD (plural of WaLaD) and it literally means "those who are born." The story of pagans killing their daughters by burying them alive years after they were born is a mythology. They were simply practicing infanticide, that is, they would murder their daughters as soon as they learned their sexes. For abortion, see 46:15.

Edip-Layth - End Note 5 (17:36)

This verse instructs us to use both our reason and senses to examine all the information we receive. It warns us against blindly following a religious teaching or political ideology and asks us to be iconoclasts. It warns us not to be hypnotized by the charisma of leaders nor by the social conventions. A society comprised of individuals that value rational and empirical inquiry will never become the victim of religious fanaticism, tragedies brought by charismatic politicians. A religion or sect that glorifies ignorance and gullibility can be very dangerous for its followers and others. As the Physicist Steven Weinberg once put profoundly, "With or without religion, you would have good people doing good things, and evil people doing evil things. But for good people to do evil things, that takes religion." See 6:74-83. The following advice is attributed to Buddha. We are not quoting this because we consider his name to be an authority, nor because we are sure that it is uttered or written by a man called Buddha; but because it articulates a profound fact: "Do not put faith in traditions, even though they have been accepted for long generations and in many countries. Do not believe a thing because many repeat it. Do not accept a thing on the authority of one or another of the sages of old, nor on the ground of statements as found in the books. Never believe anything because probability is in its favor. Do not believe in that which you yourselves have imagined, thinking that a god has inspired it. Believe nothing merely on the authority of the teachers or the priests. After examination, believe that which you have tested for yourself and found reasonable, which is in conformity with your well being and that of others'." Interestingly, this is the summary of many verses in the Quran! If the above wise statements were indeed made by Buddha, then he would be the first one who would reject the allegiance of the so-called Buddhists. The Biblical, "Know the truth, and the truth will set you free!" (John 3:24), is a powerful statement against idolatry and ignorance. St. Paul and his followers, such as Tertullian and many other church leaders turned the wisdom preached by Jesus into bigotry and dogmatism that considered philosophy and philosophers the enemy. Most faithful of religions nod positively at Voltaire's depiction of their understanding: "The truths of religion are never so well understood as by those who have lost the power of reasoning." If I really want to name myself with suffixes such as an ist, ite, or an, then I should call myself Truthist, Truthite, or Truthian! Or, maybe just, Godist, Godite, Godian! The Quran repeatedly advises us to use our intellect, to reason, to be open-minded, to be the seekers of truth, to be philosophers, to be critical thinkers, and not to be the followers of our wishful thinking or a particular crowd. For instance, see 2:170, 171, 242, 269; 3:118, 190; 6:74-83; 7:169; 8:22; 10:42, 100; 11:51; 12:2, 111; 13:4, 19; 16:67; 21:10, 67; 23:80; 24:61; 29:63; 30:28; 38:29; 39:9, 18, 21; 40:54; 59:14. See also 6:110.

Edip-Layth - End Note 6 (17:39)

The followers of hadith and sunna claim that Muhammad was given both the Quran and Wisdom, the latter being delivered in hadith books. For those who know the nature of hadith collections, this is clearly not a wise statement. The verse expressly states that the Wisdom is not separate from the Quran; it is in the Quran. We cannot divorce the Quran from wisdom and make a mockery of "wisdom" by using it to sanctify contradictory hearsay accounts and medieval culture. Besides, the fabricators of hadith were not "wise" enough to name their fabrications "Wisdom," since they picked a wrong word, hadith, which is negatively treated by the Quran when it is used for any other utterance besides the Quran (6:112-116; 33:38). Furthermore, one of the attributes of the Quran is hakym, which means "wise." See 9:31; 17:46; 18:26; 36:1; 42:21.

Edip-Layth - End Note 7 (17:46)

Those who do not acknowledge the hereafter with certainty will not understand the Quran, and they will claim that the Quran is difficult or even impossible to understand on its own. See 54:17,22,32, and 40. Traditional translations and commentaries somehow separate the word Quran" from the adjective (wahdahu = alone, only) that follows it. They translate it as "Lord alone in the Quran." Though there are many verses emphasizing God's oneness (see 39:45), this verse could be understood as another one emphasizing that message. However, this could be only a secondary meaning of this particular verse, since the adjective wahdehu is used not after the word Rab (Lord) but after the word Quran. In Arabic if one wants to say 'Quran alone,' the only way of saying it is "Quranun wahdahu." The mathematical structure of the Quran too confirms our translation. For instance, the word wahdahu is used for God in 7:70; 39:45; 40:12,84 and 60:4. If we add these numbers we get 361, or 19x19. However, if we add 17:46, where the word wahdahu is used for the Quran, the total is not in harmony with the great mathematical system.

The Creator and Master of prophets and messengers has given each special qualities and skills. It is not up to us to put them in a competition that ultimately produces fancy lies and idols. See 2:285.

Edip-Layth - End Note 9 (17:59)

Traditional translations render the meaning of "Ma" as a relative pronoun rather than a negative particle, "What stopped us from sending." The traditional translation implies that God initially sent signs/miracles to convert people and had an intention to send more signs but He is now disappointed to learn that His signs did not work as expected. Such an implication contradicts the attributes of God detailed in the Quran. Besides, we are repeatedly reminded that the purpose of sending signs/miracles has never been to make people acknowledge the message, but to support the open-minded people in their rational inquiries. The traditional translation also contradicts other verses of the Quran that remind us that messengers were supported by signs/miracles. Muhammad was not given a sign similar to previous messengers, but was rather given a unique sign, the Quran, a perpetual sign for every generation until the end of the world. See 29:51. Also, see 7:73-77; 26:155; 54:27; 91:13.

Edip-Layth - End Note 10 (17:60)

This might be a reference to Muhammad's journey to receive revelation (17:1 and 53:1-18). The diabolically poisonous tree, zaqqum, grows inside hell (37:62-66) and we are informed that it will confuse and expose the hypocrites as unappreciative people since they cannot understand that the hellfire is a metaphor. With their shallow literal understanding, they solidify their dogmatic fanaticism by scoffing at the Quran, "How can a tree grow in the middle of fire?" God uses examples with multiple purposes, thereby guiding those who are appreciative and misleading those who have already made their minds and chosen the wrong path (2:26; 3:7; 17:82; 74:31). No wonder, the Quran is a mercy and reminder for those who wish to take heed (6:157; 7:203; 12:111; 17:82; 29:51; 31:3; 45:20).

Water, with its unique chemical and physical properties, is crucial for life. For instance, the maximum density of water being at +4 Celsius degrees, in other words, its expansion in solid form, prevents oceans from freezing from the bottom up. Thus, oceans, with their diverse organisms, function as giant livers cleaning the air in the atmosphere.

The time for evening (esha) prayer starts from the declining of the sun in the horizon and lasts until the darkness of the night. The Quran contains sufficient details about the sala prayer. See 24:58; 11:1124; 38:32.

Edip-Layth - End Note 15 (17:82)

The meaning of this verse has been distorted by clerics so that they could write, package, and sell verses of the Quran as amulets, drugs, aspirin, or band-aids. The placebo effect was enough to keep the market, and Muslim masses started considering the ink and paper where the Quran written as totems. The Quran is not a drug, but a prescription for universal salvation and eternal happiness, including this world. See 10:57.

Edip-Layth - End Note 16 (17:85)

Influenced by the Christian scholars who were influenced by Greek mythology, the word ruh is commonly mistranslated as "soul." In the Quranic terminology, ruh means divine information and commandments. The thing that disconnects from our body or quits functioning during sleep or death is not ruh but nafs, that is, personality and consciousness (39:42). The Quran refers to the angel that delivers the divine revelation as Jibreel or Ruh-ul Quds, meaning "Holy Revelation" or "Holy Spirit" (6:102). God endowed the human species with a program called consciousness and personality via a special revelation (15:29; 38:72; 33:9). We can reform or restore our innate program if it is infected by viruses of ignorance, indulgence in sins, or self-inflicted abuses, by re-installing the program called ruh. The ruh in revelation revives those who have lost the function of the ruh in their genetic makeup (6:122; 8:24). See 15:29. Charlatan psychics or so-called mediums cannot bring the nafs (person) that is uploaded to God's master record, back to the world. Communication with the person of the dead is a third-rate fraud and it haunts the gullible who take the pretender serious. Is it possible to record or transfer the unique neural connections and memories recorded in a brain throughout its life into another organic or inorganic medium, such as a computer disk? In other words, can we one day isolate the information recorded in the brain in terms of a holographic network of connections from its biological material and then transfer, preserve and duplicate it as data? Considering the speed of technological advances, this possibility might even become a probability. The atheists who scoff at God's promise of resurrection by asking, "How can rotten bones be revived?" might learn this lesson in their labs: that with the biological death everything is not lost, and humans and everything in the universe are no more than "bundles of information," and information is not dependent on a particular organic medium; its transferable and theoretically eternal. However, looking at history, it is a safe bet that instead of regretting their bigotry, and acknowledging their Lord who declared this fact millennia ago, they will continue their opposition, doubts, and arrogant attitudes. Of course, this self- deception will end one day (10:24). See 15:29.

Compared to their small population, the Jewish influence is immense in its global platform, financially, politically and culturally. Disproportional to their population, Jews have exhibited astonishing examples in both good and bad, in both success and blunder, and they have enjoyed a vivid presence in world politics for millennia. This explains why the Quran mentions them so frequently both in negative (3:71; 4:46; 5:78-82; 5:60-65; 7:166) and positive terms (2:47,62; 3:33; 5:20). After being subjected to genocide and atrocious tortures by European fascist forces, Jews were scattered around the world as immigrants. Yet, they did not disappear from the global scene or take centuries to recover, as many other nations would do. A prophecy of the Old Testament, Deuteronomy 30:4-20 was fulfilled. Not surprisingly, with the help of the major powers of the time, they were able to establish their own independent state in 1948, soon after their almost utter annihilation; a state not in Germany, but in their historical land, which has once again become the focal point of a global conflict, stirring the world by showcasing human aggression, greed, hatred, cruelty, racism, and terror. As it seems, some are determined to use any means possible to get the promised lands of their ancestors (Genesis 12:1-3; Deuteronomy 1:6-8; 30:4-5; Joshua 1:1-5), while disregarding the warnings and conditions related to the promise (Joshua 1:6-7; Deuteronomy 16:18-20; 30:15-20; 31:16-17). A question regarding the promised land: since Arabs too are the children of Abraham, why aren't they considered to be the subject of this Biblical promise? If the Bible discriminated against the children of Ishmael, then what was their crime?

Edip-Layth - End Note 19 (17:110)

The word ism comes from the root SMY and means "attribute, quality." Regardless of the language, all beautiful attributes may be used for God (the god). Divine attributes do not necessarily define or describe God in an objective sense, but define and describe our relationship with our Creator and the mutual expectations. The word allah (the god) is a contraction of al (the) and elah (god). The Quran uses the word elah (god) in many verses for allah (the god) in the proper context. For instance, in the last chapter of the Quran, God is referred to as "lord of the people." The famous Quranic declaration la ilaha illa allah, therefore, can be translated into English as "there is no god but the god". See 7:180, 26:198; 41:44. The Quran is correcting the tone of the recitation and manner of the sala prayer performed by Meccan polytheists. Despite this verse reminding us of a moderate tone of voice and moderate display of prayer, the followers of hadith and sunna, like their ancestors, either pray loudly (night time) or quietly (day time). Some even use prayer as political demonstration. This verse simply reminds us not to be ashamed of our prostration before God, nor use it as a means of showing off.

Muhammad Asad - The Message Of Quran

Muhammad Asad - End Note 1 (17:1)

The above short reference to the Prophet's mystic experience of the "Night Journey" (al-isra') to Jerusalem and the subsequent "Ascension" (mi'raj) to heaven is fully discussed in Appendix IV at the end of this work. - "The Inviolable House of Worship" (al-masjid al-haram is one of the designations given in the Qur'an to the Temple of the Ka'bah, the prototype of which owed its origin to Abraham (see surah 2, note 102) and was "the first Temple set up for mankind" (3: 96), i.e., the first ever built for the worship of the One God. "The Remote [lit., "farthest"] House of Worship", on the other hand, denotes the ancient Temple of Solomon-or, rather, its site - which symbolizes here the long line of Hebrew prophets who preceded the advent of Muhammad and are alluded to by the phrase "the environs of which We had blessed". The juxtaposition of these two sacred temples is meant to show that the Qur'an does not inaugurate a "new" religion but represents a continuation and the ultimate development of the same divine message, which was preached by the prophets of old.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 2 (17:1)

Although the term ayah is most frequently used in the Qur'an in the sense of "[divine] message", we must remember that, primarily, it denotes "a sign [or "token"] by which a thing is known" (Qamus). As defined by Raghīb, it signifies any perceivable phenomenon (irrespective of whether it is apparent to the senses or only to the intellect) connected with a thing that is not, by itself, similarly perceivable: in brief, a "symbol". Hence, the expression min ayatina may be suitably rendered as "some of Our symbols", i.e., insight, through symbols, into some of the ultimate truths.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 3 (17:2)

The conjunctive particle "And" which introduces this verse is meant to show that the mystic Night Journey - and, by implication, the subsequent Ascension as well - were experiences of the same high order of divine grace as the revelation bestowed upon Moses. The Qur'an mentions in 4:164 that "God spoke His word unto Moses", i.e., directly (takliman); see also 7:143-144, and especially verse 144, in which God says to Moses, "I have raised thee above all people ... by virtue of My speaking [unto thee]". A similar directness of experience is alluded to in the opening words of this surah, "Limitless in His glory is He who transported His servant (Muhammad) by night ... so that We might show him some of Our symbols" (see note 2 above; also, Appendix IV). Apart from this, the reference, in this and many other places in the Qur'an, to the religious history of the Hebrews is due to the fact that the revelations granted to their prophets represent the earliest formulation of monotheism, which makes it ideologically important for its later development.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 4 (17:2)

The term wakil denotes "one who is entrusted with the management of (another person's) affairs", or "is responsible for [another person's] conduct". When applied to God, it is sometimes used in the sense of "guardian" (e.g., in 3:173), or "defender" (e.g., in 4:109), or-in combination with the phrase `ala kulli shay'in (as, e.g., in 6:102 or 11:12) -in the sense of "the One who has everything in His care". In the present instance (as well as in 39:62) the term evidently alludes to God's exclusive power to determine the fate of any created being or thing.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 5 (17:4)

Lit., "in the revelation" - here evidently used in the generic sense of the word, and probably applying to predictions contained in the Torah (Leviticus xxvi, 14-39 and Deuteronomy xxviii, 15-68) as well as the prophecies of Isaiah, Jeremiah, John and Jesus.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 6 (17:4)

Since both the Bible and the Qur'an mention that the children of Israel rebelled against the law of God on many occasions, there is every reason to assume that the expression "twice" (marratayn) does not refer to two single instances but, rather, to two distinct, extended periods of their history.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 7 (17:5)

The term `ibad, rendered by me above as "bondmen", denotes every kind of "created beings" (in this case, obviously human beings) inasmuch as all of them are, willingly or unwillingly, subservient to God's will (cf. 13:15 and the corresponding note 33). It is probable that the phrase "Our bondmen of terrible prowess in war" relates to the Assyrians who overran Palestine in the seventh century B.C. and caused the disappearance of the greater part of the Hebrew nation (the ten "lost tribes"), and to the Babylonians who, about one hundred years later, destroyed Solomon's Temple and carried off the remainder of the children of Israel into captivity, or to both, thus comprising all these events within one "period" (see foregoing note).-God's "sending" tribulations upon reprobate sinners is here, as elsewhere in the Qur'an, a metonym for the natural law of cause and effect to which, in the long run, the life of man-and particularly the corporate life of nations and communities -is subject.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 8 (17:6)

Lit., "We gave back to you the turn against them" - apparently a reference to the return of the Jews from the Babylonian captivity in the last quarter of the sixth century B.C., the partial re-establishment of their state, and the building of a new temple in the place of the one that had been destroyed.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 9 (17:7)

Lit., "to bring evil to your faces". Inasmuch as the face is the most prominent and expressive part of the human body, it is often used as a metonym for one's whole being; hence, the "evil done to one's face" is synonymous with "utter disgrace". Most probably, this passage relates to the destruction of the Second Temple and of Jewish statehood by Titus in the year 70 of the Christian era.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 10 (17:9)

I.e., conformable to ethical rectitude and beneficial to man's individual and social life. Thus, after showing that sinning is synonymous with denying the truth, the discourse returns to the fundamental theme of the Qur'an, already alluded to in verse 2 of this surah: namely, the statement that God always offers guidance to man through the revelations which He bestows upon His prophets.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 11 (17:11)

This, to my mind, is the meaning of the conjunctive particle wa in the above context.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 12 (17:11)

Cf. 2:216-"it may well be that you hate a thing the while it is good for you, and it may well be that you love a thing the while it is bad for you: and God knows, whereas you do not know": in other words, divine guidance is the only objective criterion as to what is good and what is bad.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 13 (17:12)

Regarding the primary meaning of the term ayah, see note 2 above. In the present context, the expression ayatayn ("two symbols") refers - as the subsequent clause shows - to the symbols of spiritual darkness and light.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 14 (17:12)

I.e., the message of the Qur'an, which is meant to lead man out of spiritual ignorance and error into the light of faith and reason.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 15 (17:12)

Lit., "the count (`adad) of years". Since, as the Qamus points out, this phrase denotes also "the years of [a person's] life, which he counts", it obviously implies here a call to spiritual self-criticism in view of the ephemeral nature of one's worldly life.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 16 (17:12)

Le., everything that man may be in need of in the domain of ethics and religion.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 17 (17:13)

The word ta'ir literally signifies a "bird" or, more properly, a "flying creature". Since the pre-Islamic Arabs often endeavoured to establish a good or bad omen and, in general, to foretell the future from the manner and direction in which birds would fly, the term ta'ir came to be tropically used in the sense of "fortune", both good and evil, or "destiny". (See in this connection surah 3, note 37, and surah 7, note 95.) It should, however, be borne in mind that the Qur'anic concept of "destiny" relates not so much to the external circumstances of and events in man's life as, rather, to the direction which this life takes in result of one's moral choices: in other words, it relates to man's spiritual fate-and this, in its turn, depends-as the Qur'an so often points out-on a person's inclinations, attitudes and conscious actions (including self-restraint from morally bad actions or, alternatively, a deliberate omission of good actions). Hence, man's spiritual fate depends on him-self and is inseparably linked with the whole tenor of his personality; and since it is God who has made man responsible for his behaviour on earth, He speaks of Himself as having "tied every human being's destiny to his neck".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 18 (17:14)

The "record" and the subsequent "account" represent man's total comprehension, on Judgment Day, of all his past life (Razi). This allegory occurs in the Qur'an in many formulations, e.g., in 37:19 or 39:68, and perhaps most incisively in 50:22 "now We have lifted from thee thy veil, and sharp is thy sight today!"

Muhammad Asad - End Note 19 (17:15)

See 6:164, 35:18 and 39:7, as well as the corresponding notes; also 53:38, which represents the earliest Qur'anic statement of this fundamental principle of ethics.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 20 (17:15)

Sc., "so that they might fully understand the meaning of right and wrong": cf. 6:131-132 and the corresponding note 117, as well as 29:59 (which, in the chronology of revelation, immediately precedes the present surah!).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 21 (17:16)

Lit., "Our command", i.e., to mend their ways. The term qaryah (ht., "town") denotes usually - though not always - a "community" or "people of a community".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 22 (17:16)

Le., to the exclusion of all moral considerations. (por the above rendering of the expression mutraf, see surah 11, note 147.) The people referred to here are those who, by virtue of their wealth and social position, embody the real leadership of their community and are, therefore, morally responsible for the behaviour of their followers.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 23 (17:18)

lit., "We assign [or "shall assign"] hell to him".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 24 (17:19)

Since caring and striving for the good of the hereafter presupposes belief in God and in man's responsibility before Him, it is obvious that the term "believer" relates, in this context, to a cognition of God's absolute oneness and uniqueness as well as to a willing acceptance of the guidance offered to man through prophetic revelation. - In the original, the whole preceding sentence has the singular form ("he who cares ... and strives ... and is a believer"); but in view of the next clause, which is expressed in the plural, it is preferable to render these pronouns, agreeably with Arabic usage, uniformly in the plural.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 25 (17:21)

Lit., "greater in degrees and greater in the bestowal of bounty (tafdilan)" - but since the latter term obviously comprises, in this instance, the concept of "merit" as well, a composite rendering would seem to be indicated.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 26 (17:23)

Whereas God is the real, ultimate cause of man's coming to life, his parents are its outward, immediate cause: and so the preceding call to God is followed by the injunction to honour and cherish one's parents. Beyond this, the whole of the present passage - up to and including verse 39- is meant to show that kindness and just dealings between man and man are an integral part of the concept of "striving for the good of the life to come"

Muhammad Asad - End Note 27 (17:23)

In Arabic, uff - a word or sound indicative of contempt, dislike or disgust.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 28 (17:24)

Lit., "lower for them the wing of humility, out of tenderness (rahmah)" = a metonymical expression evocative of a bird that lovingly spreads its wings over its offspring in the nest.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 29 (17:25)

This interpolation gives the meaning of the above elliptic sentence (Tabari, Baghawi Zamakhshari, Razi).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 30 (17:26)

In this instance, "his due" evidently refers to the loving consideration due to one's relatives (Zamakhshari and Razi); those of them who are in a state of want are included in the subsequent mention of "the needy" (al-miskin).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 31 (17:26)

Regarding this expression, see surah 2, note 145.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 32 (17:26)

Lit., "with [utter] squandering" (tabdhiran), i.e., senselessly and to no good purpose. It is to be borne in mind that the term tabdhir does not relate to the quantity but, rather, to the purpose of one's spending. Thus, Ibn `Abbas and Ibn Mas'ud (both of them quoted by Tabari) defined tabdhir as "spending without a righteous purpose" or "in a frivolous (batil) cause": and Mujahid is reported (ibid.) to have said, "If a man were to spend all that he possesses in a righteous cause, it could not be termed squandering; but if he spends even a small amount in a frivolous cause, it is squandering."

Muhammad Asad - End Note 33 (17:27)

Since squandering - in the sense explained in the preceding note - implies an utter lack of gratitude for the gift of sustenance bestowed by God upon man, the squanderers are described as being "of the ilk [lit., "brethren"] of the satans". Regarding the deeper meaning of the terms "satans" and "satanic", see surah 15, note 16.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 34 (17:28)

Le., "because thou art thyself in want, and therefore unable to help others".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 35 (17:29)

A metaphor signifying miserliness and, in particular, unwillingness to help others (cf. a similar expression in 5:64).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 36 (17:31)

Historically, this may be a reference to the pre-Islamic Arabian custom of burying unwanted female children alive (see note 4 on 81:8-9), as well as to the occasional-though much rarer-sacrifices of male children to some of their gods (see Zamakhshari 's comments on 6:137). Beyond this, however, the above prohibition has a timeless validity inasmuch as it relates also to abortions undertaken "for fear of poverty", i.e., on purely economic grounds.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 37 (17:32)

Lit., "do not come near adultery", thus intensifying the prohibition. It is to be noted that the term zina signifies all sexual intercourse between a man and a woman who are not husband and wife, irrespective of whether either of them is married to another partner or not; hence, it denotes both "adultery" and "fornication" in the English senses of these terms.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 38 (17:33)

Le., in the execution of a legal sentence or in a just war (see 2:190 and the corresponding note 167), or in individual; legitimate self-defence.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 39 (17:33)

This refers to the legal punishment for homicide, termed qisas ("just retribution") and explained in 2:178 and the corresponding notes. In the present context, the term wali ("protector" or "defender of [one's] rights") is usually taken to mean the heir or next of kin of the victim; Zamakhshari, however, observes that it may also apply to the government (as-sultan): an interpretation which is obviously based on the concept of the government as the "protector" or "defender of the rights" of all its citizens. As regards the expression qatila mazluman ("slain wrongfully"), it is obvious that it refers only to cases of wilful homicide, since the concept of zulm applies in the Qur'an exclusively to intentional and never to accidental wrongdoing.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 40 (17:33)

Thus, the defender of the victim's rights (in this case, a court of justice) is not only not entitled to impose a capital sentence on any but the actual murderer or murderers, but may also, if the case warrants it, concede mitigating circumstances and refrain from capital punishment altogether.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 41 (17:33)

I.e., he is avenged in this world by the retribution exacted from his murderer, and in the life to come, blessed by the special grace which God bestows on all who have been slain without any legal or moral justification (Razi). Some of the commentators, however, relate the pronoun "he" to the defender of the victim's rights, respectively, to the latter's heir or next of kin, and explain the above phrase as meaning "he is sufficiently helped by the law of just retribution (qisas) and should not, therefore, demand any punishment in excess of what is equitable".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 42 (17:34)

See surah 6, note 149.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 43 (17:34)

Lit., "every promise shall be asked about" or "investigated".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 44 (17:35)

Lit., "straight" (mustaqim)-a term which in the Qur'an has invariably a spiritual or moral connotation. Hence, as in the similar phrase in 6:152, the above injunction applies not merely to commercial transactions but to all dealings between man and man.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 45 (17:36)

Or: "do not follow [or "pursue"] anything...", etc. This would seem to relate to groundless assertions about events or people (and hence to slander or false testimony), to statements based on guesswork unsupported by evidence, or to interfering in social situations which one is unable to evaluate correctly.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 46 (17:38)

According to some commentators, this condemnation refers to what has been mentioned in the preceding two verses; more probably, however, it extends to the subject-matter of all the prohibitions - whether enunciated as such or merely implied - in verses 22-37.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 47 (17:39)

Or: "which thy Sustainer has revealed to thee". It is to be noted that the noun hikmah, usually signifying "wisdom", is derived from the verb hakama ("he prevented" or "restrained [him or it]", i.e., from acting in an undesirable manner). Hence, the primary meaning of hikmah is "that which prevents one from evil or ignorant behaviour" (cf. Lane 11, 617); in its positive sense, it signifies "[conscious] insight into that which is most excellent" (Lisan al-`Arab, Taj al-'Arus). Inasmuch as this term refers here, in particular, to what is "odious in God's sight", it implies moral discrimination (or "the knowledge of right and wrong") on the part of men; and this, in its turn, presupposes the existence of an absolute, God-willed standard of moral values.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 48 (17:39)

Since there is no basis for an acceptance of absolute moral values - i.e., values that are independent of time and social circumstances-without a belief in God and His ultimate judgment, the passage ends, as it began. with a call to a cognition of God's oneness and uniqueness.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 49 (17:40)

Lit., "and taken unto Himself, out of the angels, females": an allusion to the pre-Islamic Arabian belief that the angels - conceived of as a kind of female sub-deities - were God's "daughters", and this despite the pagan Arabs' contempt for female offspring (cf. 16:57-59 and the corresponding notes). In its wider implication, this rhetorical question is meant to bring out the absurdity of the supposition that God's divinity could be projected into, or shared by, any other being (cf. 6:100-101).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 50 (17:42)

The term `arsh (lit., "throne" or, more properly, "seat of power") is used in the Qur'an to denote God's absolute sway over all that exists; hence, the expression dhu 'l-arsh may be suitably rendered as "He who is enthroned in His almightiness". Beyond this, the commentators are not entirely agreed as to the purport of the above sentence. Some take it to mean that "had there been other deities apart from God, they would endeavour to deprive Him of some or all of His power, and would thus create chaos in the universe". Others-and most prominently among them Tabari and Ibn Kathir - have a far better, though somewhat more complicated explanation to offer. Starting from the legitimate assumption that those who believe in the existence of other deities or divine powers apart from God regard them as no more than mediators between man and Him, the argument runs thus: If those alleged divine or semi-divine "mediators" would really exist, then it is obvious that, being no more than mediators, even they would have to recognize Him as the Supreme Being - which would amount to admitting that they have no power of their own but are, in the last resort, entirely dependent on and subject to Him: and this unavoidable conclusion implies a negation of any divinity in those imaginary "mediators". This being so, is it not far more reasonable for man to turn directly to God, who is almighty, all-seeing, all-hearing, and has therefore no need of any mediator?

Muhammad Asad - End Note 51 (17:43)

See surah 6, note 88.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 52 (17:44)

For an explanation of this expression, see surah 2, note 20.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 53 (17:44)

Le., although everything in creation bears witness to the existence of a conscious Creative Will, man is only too often blind and deaf to this overwhelming evidence of God's ever-present almightiness.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 54 (17:45)

This passage connects with verse 41 above.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 55 (17:46)

Cf. 6:25. See also 2:7 and the corresponding note.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 56 (17:46)

Lit., "whenever thou dost mention in the Qur'an thy Sustainer alone".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 57 (17:47)

I.e., to find fault with the message of the Qur'an.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 58 (17:51)

Lit., "or any created matter which, in your hearts, appears yet more difficult" - i.e., even less susceptible of having or receiving life.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 59 (17:52)

Man's life on earth will appear to him "but as a little while" in comparison with the unlimited duration of the life in the hereafter (Tabari, Zamakhshari). A further implication is that man's concept of "time" is earthbound and, hence, has no meaning in the context of ultimate reality. The preceding reference to the erstwhile deniers of the possibility of resurrection as "answering God's call by praising Him" implies that as soon as they are resurrected they will become fully aware of His existence and almightiness.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 60 (17:53)

Cf. 16:125 (and the corresponding note 149) as well as 29:46.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 61 (17:53)

Lit., "Satan stirs up discord between them".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 62 (17:54)

For my rendering of the term wakil, in this context, as "one who has the power to determine the fate [of another being]", see note 4 on verse 2 of this surah. An alternative, equally acceptable rendering of the above phrase would be, "We have not sent thee charged with responsibility for their conduct."

Muhammad Asad - End Note 63 (17:55)

This seems to be an allusion to the role of Muhammad as the Last Prophet (Zamakhshari, Baydawi): despite his personal inability to "determine the fate" of the people to whom he conveyed God's message, that message is destined to remain alive forever.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 64 (17:55)

I.e., just as David's "book of divine wisdom" (the Psalms) had outlived the glory of his earthly kingdom, so will Muhammad's message, the Qur'an, outlive all the changing fortunes of his followers.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 65 (17:56)

Sc., "to those who believe in the existence of any divine power apart from God".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 66 (17:56)

As the sequence shows, this relates to the worship of saints or angels.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 67 (17:56)

I.e., to transfer it onto themselves: obviously an allusion to the Christian doctrine of "vicarious atonement".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 68 (17:57)

I.e., the greatest of the prophets, as well as the angels.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 69 (17:58)

I.e., since everything in this world is ephemeral and bound to perish, man ought to be conscious of the life to come.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 70 (17:58)

Lit., "in the decree" -i.e., for His creation. in accordance with the immutable laws which God has laid down

Muhammad Asad - End Note 71 (17:59)

This highly elliptic sentence has a fundamental bearing on the purport of the Qur'an as a whole. In many places the Qur'an stresses the fact that the Prophet Muhammad, despite his being the last and greatest of God's apostles, was not empowered to perform miracles similar to those with which the earlier prophets are said to have reinforced their verbal messages. His only miracle was and is the Qur'an itself - a message perfect in its lucidity and ethical comprehensiveness, destined for all times and all stages of human development, addressed not merely to the feelings but also to the minds of men, open to everyone, whatever his race or social environment, and bound to remain unchanged forever. Since the earlier prophets invariably appealed to their own community and their own time alone, their teachings were, of necessity, circumscribed by the social and intellectual conditions of that particular community and time; and since the people to whom they addressed themselves had not yet reached the stage of independent thinking, those prophets stood in need of symbolic portents or miracles (see surah 6, note 94) in order to make the people concerned realize the inner truth of their mission. The message of the Qur'an, on the other hand, was revealed at a time when mankind (and, in particular, that part of it which inhabited the regions marked by the earlier, Judaeo-Christian religious development) had reached a degree of maturity which henceforth enabled it to grasp an ideology as such without the aid of those persuasive portents and miraculous demonstrations which in the past, as the above verse points out, only too often gave rise to new, grave misconceptions.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 72 (17:59)

See the second paragraph of 7:73 and the corresponding note 57. Although there is absolutely no indication in the Qur'an that the she-camel referred to was of miraculous origin, it was meant to be a test for the people of Thamud (cf. 54:27), and thus a "light-giving portent" (mubsirah).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 73 (17:60)

The vision (ru'ya) mentioned here is the Prophet's experience of the Ascension, preceded by the Night Journey (see Appendix IV). Inasmuch as this experience was and is open to most conflicting interpretations and, hence, may give rise to doubts regarding its objective reality, it becomes-as stated in the sequence-"a trial for men": the weak of faith and the superficial are shaken in their belief in Muhammad's veracity and, thus, in his prophethood; whereas those who firmly believe in God see in it an extraordinary evidence of the spiritual grace which He bestows on His chosen ones, and are, therefore, strengthened in their faith in the message of the Qur'an.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 74 (17:60)

As regards "the tree cursed in this Qur'an", there is no doubt that it is the "tree of deadly fruit" (shajarat az-zaqqum) spoken of in 37:62 ff. and 44:43 ff. as one of the manifestations of hell (see 37:62-63 and the corresponding notes 22 and 23, the latter of which explains why this "tree" has become "a trial for men"). In the above context it is described as "cursed" because it obviously symbolizes hell itself. The reason why only "hell"-and no other manifestation of the hereafter-is specifically alluded to here becomes evident in the subsequent statement that it is meant to convey a warning.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 75 (17:61)

For an explanation of the allegory of Adam and the angels, see 2:30-34, 7:11-18 and 15:26-41, as well as the corresponding notes. In the present instance, as in Al-A'raf and Al-Hijr, the accent is on the contempt of Iblis for Adam (which is obviously a metonym for the whole human race): hence, this passage apparently connects with the end of verse 53 above-"verily, Satan is man's open foe!" The stress on man's dignity - expressed in God's commandment to the angels to "prostrate themselves before Adam" - links this allegory with verses 70-72.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 76 (17:62)

Cf. 7:16-17. The verb hanaka denotes, literally, "he put a rope around the lower jaw (hanak) [of a horse]", i.e., in order to lead it; hence, the form ihtanaka means "he made [another being] follow him submissively" or "obey him blindly".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 77 (17:64)

This is an idiomatically established metaphor, signifying "with all thy might".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 78 (17:64)

An allusion to possessions acquired by sinful means or spent on sinful purposes, and to the begetting of children through fornication or adultery. (It must, however, be pointed out that in the ethics and the canon law of Islam no moral stigma and no legal disability whatever attaches to the child thus begotten.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 79 (17:64)

Cf. 4:120 and the corresponding note 142.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 80 (17:65)

I.e., "thou shalt have no real power over them", as brought out in 14:22 and 15:42.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 81 (17:68)

Lit., "a storm-wind that raises stones" (Taj al-'Arus, art. hasaba).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 82 (17:69)

Lit., "therein".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 83 (17:70)

I.e., by bestowing upon them the faculty of conceptual thinking (cf. 2:31 and the corresponding note 23), which makes them superior in this respect to all other animate beings, and even to the angels. By stressing here this unique distinction of man, the present passage connects with, and continues the theme of, verse 61 above.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 84 (17:71)

Thus Razi interprets the phrase nad'u kulla unasin bi-imamihim (lit., "We shall summon all human beings by [mentioning] their leaders" or "guides"). In his opinion, the expression imam (lit., "leader" or "guide") has in this context an abstract connotation, signifying the conscious disposition, good or bad, which governs a person's behaviour and provides the motives for his deeds. This interpretation is most convincing, and particularly so in view of the fundamental hadith quoted in my note 32 on 53:39.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 85 (17:71)

A symbolic image, often used in the Qur'an, denoting an acknowledgement of righteousness in the spiritual sense, just as the "left hand" indicates its opposite (cf. 69:19 and 25, as well as 7:84

Muhammad Asad - End Note 86 (17:71)

This last clause obviously applies to both the righteous rendering of fatil, see surah 4, note 67.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 87 (17:72)

Cf. 20:124-125. This passage shows that man's life in the hereafter is not merely conditioned by the manner of his life on earth, but is also an organic extension of the latter, manifested in a natural development and intensification of previously-existing tendencies.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 88 (17:73)

This relates to an offer of "compromise" made by the pagan Quraysh: they demanded of the Prophet that he give some sort of recognition to their tribal deities and attribute this recognition to God; in return, they promised to recognize him as a prophet and to make him their leader. Naturally, the Prophet rejected this offer.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 89 (17:74)

The implication is that the Prophet's deep faith made it impossible for him to consider anything of this kind.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 90 (17:75)

I.e., "for having gone astray despite the revelation bestowed on thee by God, and for having, by thy example, led thy followers astray as well". The purport of the above passage goes, however, beyond the historical event or events to which it relates: it expresses the idea that any conscious offence against a fundamental truth is an unforgivable sin.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 91 (17:76)

It must be borne in mind that this is a Meccan surah, revealed at a time when the persecution, both physical and moral, which the Prophet and his followers had to suffer at the hands of the pagan Quraysh reached the peak of its intensity.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 92 (17:76)

Lit., "after thee".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 93 (17:76)

This prophecy was fulfilled a little over two years later, in the month of Ramadan, 2 H., when those same leaders of the Quraysh were killed in the battle of Badr.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 94 (17:77)

I.e., the people who drove them away were invariably punished with destruction.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 95 (17:78)

As is evidenced by the practice (sunnah) of the Prophet, this verse fully circumscribes the five daily prayers laid down in Islam as obligatory for every adult man and woman: at dawn (fajr), shortly after the sun passes its zenith (zuhr), in the middle of the afternoon (`asr), immediately after sunset (maghrib), and after the night has fully set in (`isha'). Although parts of the Qur'an should be recited in every prayer, the early morning prayer is metonymically singled out as the "recitation (Qur'an) at dawn" because the Prophet, under divine inspiration, used to lengthen his recitation while praying at that time, thus stressing the special significance of this particular prayer. (See next note.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 96 (17:78)

Most of the classical commentators take this to mean "witnessed by the angels of night as well as those of day", since dawn is the time between night and day. Razi, however, is of the opinion that the "witness" to which the Qur'an refers here is the spark of God-given illumination in man's own soul-the heightening of his inner perception at the time when the darkness and stillness of night begins to give way to the life-giving light of day, so that prayer becomes a means of attaining to deeper insight into the realm of spiritual truths and, thus, of achieving communion with all that is holy.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 97 (17:79)

Lit., "as a deed beyond that which is incumbent on thee" (nafilatan laka)-i.e., in addition to the five obligatory prayers. Hence, the above is not an injunction but a recommendation, although the Prophet himself invariably spent the greater part of the night in prayer.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 98 (17:82)

By "evildoers" are meant people who, out of self-conceit or an excessive "love of this world"; reject out of hand any suggestion of divine guidance-and, with it, any belief in the existence of absolute moral values -and in the end, as the sequence shows, fall prey to spiritual nihilism.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 99 (17:83)

Cf. 11:9-10 and the corresponding notes.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 100 (17:84)

Lit., "as to who is best guided on a path".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 101 (17:85)

For this interpretation of the term ruh, see surah 16, note 2. Some commentators are of the opinion that it refers here, specifically, to the revelation of the Qur'an; others understand by it the "soul", in particular the soul of man. This latter interpretation is, however, unconvincing inasmuch as the preceding as well as the subsequent verses relate explicitly to the Qur'an and, hence, to the phenomenon of divine revelation.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 102 (17:86)

Lit., "to be thy guardian against [or "before"] Us"-i.e., "to provide thee with other means of guidance": an allusion to the fact that divine guidance is the only source of ethics in the absolute sense of this word. The "taking away" of revelation denotes its alienation from the hearts and the memory of men, as well as its disappearance in written form.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 103 (17:88)

See Appendix III.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 104 (17:89)

According to Raghib, the noun mathal (lit., "similitude", "parable" or "example") is here more or less synonymous with wasf ("description by means of a comparison", i.e., "definition"). In its broadest sense, this term signifies "a lesson".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 105 (17:89)

Le., they are unwilling to accept any idea which runs counter to their own, blasphemous inclinations.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 106 (17:90)

I.e., like Moses (cf. 2:60).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 107 (17:91)

This seems to be a derisory allusion to the allegory of paradise so often mentioned in the Qur'an.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 108 (17:92)

Lit., "claimed": possibly a reference to the warning expressed in 34:9, which was revealed somewhat earlier than the present surah.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 109 (17:93)

A reply to this demand of the unbelievers is found in verse 7 of Al-An'am, revealed according to Suyuti -shortly after the present surah. But the allusion to, this and the preceding "conditions" is not merely historical: it illustrates a widely prevalent, psychologically contradictory attitude of mind -a strange mixture of prima-facie scepticism and primitive credulity which makes belief in a prophetic message dependent on the prophet's "performing miracles" (cf. 6:37 and 109 and 7:203). Since the only miracle granted by God to Muhammad is the Qur'an itself (see the first part of verse 59 of this surah, as well as note 71 above), he is bidden, in the next passage, to declare that these demands are irrelevant and, by implication, frivolous.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 110 (17:93)

I.e., "miracles are in the power of God alone" (cf. 6:109 and the corresponding note 94).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 111 (17:94)

Lit., "save that they said". The verb qala (as also the noun qawl) is often used tropically in the sense of holding or asserting an opinion or a belief; in the above case it obviously implies a conceptual objection.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 112 (17:97)

The phrase "for them" is meant, I believe, to stress the individual character of the suffering allegorized in the Qur'an as a "blazing flame" (sa'ir). For a further discussion of this terminology and its philosophical implications, see Appendix I.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 113 (17:98)

Implying that this denial of God's power to resurrect the dead (mentioned in exactly the same phrasing in verse 49 of this surah) is equivalent to a denial of His almightiness and, hence, of His Being-all of which is characterized by the words "blind and deaf and dumb" in the preceding verse.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 114 (17:99)

Lit., "to create the like of them" -i.e., to resurrect them individually, each of them having the same identity (or "likeness") which he or she had before death.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 115 (17:99)

Lit., "a term (ajal) for them". Since ajal denotes, primarily, "a specified term [at which something falls due]", it obviously relates here to the inescapable fact of resurrection.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 116 (17:99)

See notes 98 and 105 above.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 117 (17:100)

Lit., "grace" (rahmah).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 118 (17:100)

I.e., since man is, by his very nature, dependent on material possessions, he instinctively tries to hold on to them; God, on the other hand, is self-sufficient and, therefore, above all need of placing any limits on His bestowal of bounty (hence my interpolation). This implied reference to God's grace and bounty is necessitated by the emphasis, in the preceding as well as in the subsequent passages, on the fact that He has never ceased to guide man, through His prophets, towards the good life.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 119 (17:101)

Some of the commentators assume that this is an allusion to the miracles performed by Moses, while others (relying on a Tradition quoted in the compilations of Nasa'i, Ibn Hanbal, Bayhaqi, Ibn Majah and Tabarani) see in it a reference to nine specific commandments or ethical principles, the foremost of them being a stress on God's oneness and uniqueness. In my opinion, however, the number "nine" may be no more than a metonym for "several", just as the numbers "seven" and "seventy" are often used in classical Arabic to denote "several" or "many"

Muhammad Asad - End Note 120 (17:101)

I.e., of the present time. The whole phrase has this meaning: "Ask them about what the Qur'an tells us in this respect, and they will be bound to confirm it on the basis of their own scriptures." This "confirmation" apparently relates to what is said in verse 104, explaining why the story of Moses and Pharaoh has been mentioned in the present context. (The story as such appears in greater detail in 7:103-137 and 20:49-79.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 121 (17:101)

Cf. 7:105-"let the children of Israel go with me!"

Muhammad Asad - End Note 122 (17:101)

Or: "that thou art bewitched". However, my rendering is based on Tabari's interpretation of the passive participle mashur, which I consider preferable in view of the subsequent reference to the miraculous signs granted by God to Moses.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 123 (17:102)

See surah 6, note 94.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 124 (17:103)

See Surah 7, note 100.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 125 (17:104)

According to Razi, the expression laff denotes a human crowd composed of innumerable heterogeneous elements, good and bad, strong and weak, fortunate and unfortunate: in short, it characterizes mankind in all its aspects. It is obviously used here to refute, once again, the idea that the children of Israel are a "chosen people" by virtue of their Abrahamic descent and, therefore, a priori and invariably destined for God's grace. The Qur'an rejects this claim by stating that on Resurrection Day all mankind will be judged, and none will have a privileged position.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 126 (17:105)

Lit., "with truth" or "in truth".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 127 (17:105)

I.e., it has come down to man, through the Prophet, without any alteration, omission or addition.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 128 (17:106)

Lit., "which We have divided into [consecutive] parts" or, according to some authorities (quoted by Razi), "set forth with clarity". The rendering adopted by me allows for both these meanings.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 129 (17:106)

The above verse alludes both to the historical fact that the process of the revelation of the Qur'an was gradual, extending over the twenty-three years of the Prophet's ministry, and to the fact that it is nevertheless one integral whole and can, therefore, be properly understood only if it is considered in its entirety - that is to say, if each of its passages is read in the light of all the other passages which it contains. (See also 20:114 and the corresponding note 101.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 130 (17:107)

Lit., "before it"-i.e., before the Qur'an as such has come within their ken.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 131 (17:108)

This may be an allusion to the many Biblical predictions of the advent of the Prophet Muhammad, especially to Deuteronomy xviii, 15 and 18 (cf. surah 2, note 33). In its wider sense, however, the "fulfilment of God's promise" relates to His bestowal of a definitive revelation, the Qur'an, henceforth destined to guide man at all stages of his spiritual, cultural and social development.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 132 (17:110)

For an explanation of the expression al-asma' al-husna (lit., "the most perfect [or "most goodly"] names"), see surah 7, note 145. The epithet ar-rahman -rendered by me throughout as "the Most Gracious" -has an intensive significance, denoting the unconditional, all-embracing quality and exercise of grace and mercy, and is applied exclusively to God, "who has willed upon Himself the law of grace and mercy" (6:12 and 54).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 133 (17:111)

Lit., "who has not taken unto Himself for "begotten"] a son" - i.e., who is free of the imperfection inherent in the concept of begetting a child as an extension of one's own being. Since this statement not merely refutes the Christian doctrine of Jesus as "the son of God" but, beyond that, stresses the logical impossibility of connecting such a concept with God, the clause is best rendered in the present tense, and the noun walad in its primary sense of "offspring", which applies to a child of either sex.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 134 (17:111)

Lit., "and has no protector [to aid Him] on ,account of any [supposed] weakness [on His per)".

Edip-Layth	18:11 So We sealed upon their ears in the cave for a number of years.

The Monotheist Group	18:11 So We put forth upon their ears for many years in the cave.
Muhammad Asad	18:11 And thereupon We veiled their ears in the cave ⁹ for many a year,
Rashad Khalifa	18:11 We then sealed their ears in the cave for a predetermined number of years.

Edip-Layth	18:12 Then We roused them to know which of the two groups would be best at calculating the duration of their stay.
The Monotheist Group	18:12 Then We sent them to know which of the two groups had remained for as long as they stayed.
Muhammad Asad	18:12 and then We awakened Christianity was no longer persecuted and had even become the official religion of the Roman Empire. The ancient coin (dating from the reign of Decius) with which the young man wanted to pay for his purchases immediately aroused curiosity; people began to question the stranger, and the story of the Men of the Cave and their miraculous sleep came to light. them: ¹⁰ [and We did all this] so that We might mark out [to the world] ¹¹ which of the two points of view showed a better comprehension of the time-span during which they had remained in this state. ¹²
Rashad Khalifa	18:12 Then we resurrected them to see which of the two parties could count the duration of their stay therein.
Shabbir Ahmed	18:12 And then We roused them (out of the Cave), in order to test for themselves which of the two parties, (the young men and their friends in town, or their opponents), had made better use of the time. ⁴

Muhammad Asad	18:13 [And now] We shall truly relate to thee their story: ¹³ Behold, they were young men who had attained to faith in their Sustainer: and [so] We deepened their consciousness of the right way ¹⁴
Rashad Khalifa	18:13 We narrate to you their history, truthfully. They were youths who believed in their Lord, and we increased their guidance.

Muhammad Asad	18:14 and endowed their hearts with strength, so that they stood up ¹⁵ and said [to one another]: "Our Sustainer is the Sustainer of the heavens and the earth. Never shall we invoke any deity other than Him: [if we did,] we should indeed have uttered an enormity!
Rashad Khalifa	18:14 We strengthened their hearts when they stood up and proclaimed: "Our only Lord is the Lord of the heavens and the earth. We will never worship any other god beside Him. Otherwise, we would be far astray.
Shabbir Ahmed	18:14 We strengthened their hearts as they took a firm stand and said, "Our only Lord is the Sustainer of the heavens and the earth. Never shall we call upon any 'authority' other than Him. If we did, we would be in enormous schism." ⁵

Muhammad Asad	18:15 These people of ours have taken to worshipping [other] deities instead of Him, without being able to ¹⁶ adduce any reasonable evidence in support of their beliefs; ¹⁷ and who could be more wicked than he who invents a lie about God? ¹⁸

Muhammad Asad	18:16 Hence, now that you have withdrawn from them and from all that they worship instead of God, take refuge in that cave: God will spread His grace over you, and will endow you - whatever your [outward] condition - with all that your souls may need! ¹⁹

The Monotheist Group	18:17 And you see the sun when it rises, it visits their cave from the right, and when it sets, it touches them from the left, while they are in an enclosure from it. That is from God's signs. Whomever God guides is the guided one, and whomever He misguides, you will not find for him any ally to lead.
Muhammad Asad	18:17 And [for many a year] thou might have seen the sun, on its rising, incline away from their cave on the right, and, on its setting, turn aside from them on the left, while they lived on in that spacious chamber, ²⁰ [bearing witness to] this of God's messages: He whom God guides, he alone has found the right way; whereas for him whom He lets go astray thou canst never find any protector who would point out the right way.
Rashad Khalifa	A Guiding Teacher is a Prerequisite 18:17 You could see the sun when it rose coming from the right side of their cave, and when it set, it shone on them from the left, as they slept in the hollow thereof. This is one of GOD's portents. Whomever GOD guides is the truly guided one, and whomever He sends astray, you will not find for him a guiding teacher.
Shabbir Ahmed	18:17 And you would have seen the sun rising on the right side of the Cave, and set, aside from them, on the left while they lived on in that spacious chamber. Edip-Layth	18:18 You would reckon they are awake while they are asleep. We turn them on the right-side and on the left-side, and their dog has his legs outstretched by the entrance. If you looked upon them you would have run away from them and you would have been filled with fear from them!
The Monotheist Group	18:18 And you would think they are awake while they are asleep. And We turn them on the right-side and on the left-side, and their dog has his legs outstretched in their midst. If you looked upon them you would have run away from them and you would have been filled with terror from them!
Muhammad Asad	18:18 And thou wouldst have thought that they were awake, whereas they lay asleep. And We caused them to turn over repeatedly, now to the right, now to the left; and their dog [lay] on the threshold, its forepaws outstretched. Hadst thou come upon them [unprepared], thou wouldst surely have turned away from them in flight, and wouldst surely have been filled with awe of them. ²¹
Rashad Khalifa	18:18 You would think that they were awake, when they were in fact asleep. We turned them to the right side and the left side, while their dog stretched his arms in their midst. Had you looked at them, you would have fled from them, stricken with terror.
Shabbir Ahmed	18:18 You would have thought that they were awake, even when they slept. (They remained alert round the clock.) We made them change their positions right and left, frequently. They had a faithful dog to guard the entrance, with its four paws outstretched (ready to pounce). The whole environment was awe-inspiring. Had you come upon them suddenly, you would have fled away from them in awe.

And let him be careful and let no one take notice of you."
Muhammad Asad	18:19 And so, [in the course of time,] We awakened them; ²² and they began to ask one another [as to what had happened to them]. ²³ One of them asked: "How long have you remained thus?" [The others] answered: "We have remained thus a day, or part of a day." ²⁴ Said they [who were endowed with deeper insight]: "Your Sustainer knows best how long you have thus remained. ²⁵ Let, then, one of you go with these silver coins to the town, and let him find out what food is

"Your Lord knows best how long we stayed here, so let us send one of us with this money to the city. Let him fetch the cleanest food, and buy some for us. Let him keep a low profile, and attract no attention.
Shabbir Ahmed	18:19 And so, when We caused them to rise (out of the Cave), they began to ask one another (about the next step). One of them asked, "How long have you been here?" "We have been here a day or part of a day!" they answered. Finally they said, "Your Lord knows best how long. And so, some [people] said: "Erect a building in their memory; ³⁰ God knows best what happened to them." Said they whose opinion prevailed in the end: "Indeed, we must surely raise a house of worship in their memory!"
Rashad Khalifa	Connection With the End of the World 18:21 We caused them to be discovered, to let everyone know that GOD's promise is true, and to remove all doubt concerning the end of the world. The people then disputed among themselves regarding them. Some said, "Let us build a building around them." Their Lord is the best knower about them. Those who prevailed said, "We will build a place of worship around them."⁴
Shabbir Ahmed	18:21 And in this way We caused them to be discovered (when their mission had succeeded), and everyone realized that God's promise is always true. There remained no doubt about the Revolution. (The Dwellers of the Cave were revered by their people as the Divine Order was restored. Time went by and they passed on. The reverence of the people took a turn.) Some people said, "Erect a building in their memory. God knows best their true stature." The Monotheist Group	18:29 And say: "The truth is from your Lord, so let whomever desires believe, and whomever desires reject." We have prepared for the wicked a Fire whose walls will be surrounding them. And if they cry out, they are given a water like boiling oil which burns their faces. What a miserable place!
Muhammad Asad	18:29 And say: "The truth [has now come] from your Sustainer: let, then, him who wills, believe in it, and let him who wills, reject it." Verily, for all who sin against themselves [by rejecting Our truth] 39 We have readied a fire whose billowing folds will encompass them from all sides; 40 and if they beg for water, they will be given water [hot] like molten lead, which will scald their faces: how dreadful a drink, and how evil a place to rest!
Rashad Khalifa	Absolute Freedom of Religion 18:29 Proclaim: "This is the truth from your Lord," then whoever wills let him believe, and whoever wills let him disbelieve. We have prepared for the transgressors a fire that will completely surround them. When they scream for help, they will be given a liquid like concentrated acid that scalds the faces. What a miserable drink! What a miserable destiny!
Shabbir Ahmed	18:29 And proclaim, "This is the truth from your Lord. Whoever accepts it let him accept it, and whoever rejects it, let him reject it." Surely, for all those who wrong their own 'self', We have readied billowing folds of fire to surround them. When they beg for water, they will be given their burning hot deeds that backfire on their faces, a drink of distress they gave others. How dreadful a drink! And how terrible a resting place! 14

	Do not Follow Your Ardent Enemy
Edip-Layth	18:50 When We said to the angels: "Submit to Adam." They all submitted except for Satan, he was of the Jinn, so he disobeyed the order of his Lord. "Will you take him and his progeny as allies besides Me, while they are your enemy?" Miserable for the wicked is the substitute! ¹⁰
The Monotheist Group	18:50 And We said to the angels: "Yield to Adam." So they all yielded except for Satan, he was of the Jinn, so he disobeyed the order of his Lord. Will you take him and his progeny as allies besides Me, while they are your enemy? Miserable for the wicked is the substitute!
Muhammad Asad	18:50 AND [remember that] when We told the angels, "Prostrate yourselves before Adam," ⁵² they all prostrated themselves, save Iblis: he [too] was one of those invisible beings, ⁵³ but then he turned away from his Sustainer's command. Will you, then, take him and his cohorts ⁵⁴ for (your), masters instead of Me, although they are your foe? How vile an exchange on the evildoers' part! ⁵⁵
	Classification of God's Creatures
Rashad Khalifa	18:50 We said to the angels, "Fall prostrate before Adam." They fell prostrate, except Satan. He became a jinn, for he disobeyed the order of his Lord. Will you choose him and his descendants as lords instead of Me, even though they are your enemies? What a miserable substitute!
	18:50 Recall when We said to the angels, "Humble yourselves to Adam!" They all humbled themselves except Iblees. He was of the hidden selfish desires that

Shabbir Ahmed	drifted away from his Lord's command. Will you still befriend him and his comrades rather than Me? And they are enemies to you! Miserable is the exchange the wrongdoers make. ²¹

Muhammad Asad	18:52 Hence, [bear in mind] the Day on which He will say, "Call [now] unto those beings whom you imagined to have a share in My divinity!" ⁵⁸ - whereupon they will invoke them, but those [beings] will not respond to them: for We shall have placed between them an unbridgeable gulf. ⁵⁹
Rashad Khalifa	18:52 The day will come when He says, "Call upon My partners, whom you claimed to be gods beside Me," they will call on them, but they will not respond to them. An insurmountable barrier will separate them from each other.
Shabbir Ahmed	18:52 Be mindful of the Day when He will say, "Call those whom you assigned as My partners." Then they will call upon them, but they will not hear their call. We shall set a gulf of doom between them.

The Monotheist Group	18:54 And We have clarified in this Qur'an for the people from every example; but mankind was always most argumentative.
Muhammad Asad	18:54 THUS, INDEED, have We given in this Qur'an many facets to every kind of lesson [designed] for [the benefit of] mankind. 60 However, man is, above all else, always given to contention:

The Monotheist Group	18:55 And what prevented the people from believing when the guidance came to them, and to seek forgiveness from their Lord? Are they waiting for what happened to the people of old to come to them, or that the retribution be brought to them face to face?
Muhammad Asad	18:55 for, what is there to keep people from attaining to faith now that guidance has come unto them, and from asking their Sustainer to forgive them their sins - unless it be [their wish] that the fate of the [sinful] people of ancient times should befall them [as well], or that the [ultimate] suffering should befall them in the hereafter? 61
Rashad Khalifa	18:55 Nothing prevented the people from believing, when the guidance came to them, and from seeking the forgiveness of their Lord, except that they demanded to see the same (kind of miracles) as the previous generations, or challenged to see the retribution beforehand.

Shabbir Ahmed	18:55 For, what is there to keep people from attaining belief now that guidance has come to them, and from asking the protecting forgiveness of their Lord? Unless they choose the fate of the ancient people to befall them or that the doom reaches them even faster.

The Monotheist Group	18:57 And who is more wicked than one who is reminded of his Lord's verses but he turned away from them, and he forgot what his hands had done. We have made veils upon their hearts from understanding them, and a deafness in their ears. And if you invite them to the guidance, they will never be guided.
Muhammad Asad	18:57 And who could be more wicked than he to whom his Sustainer's messages are conveyed and who thereupon turns away from them, forgetting all [the evil] that his hands may have wrought? ⁶² Behold, over their hearts have We laid veils which prevent them from grasping the truth, and into their ears, deafness; and though thou call them onto the right path, ⁶³ they will never allow themselves to be guided.

	Divine Intervention
Rashad Khalifa	18:57 Who are more evil than those who are reminded of their Lord's proofs, then disregard them, without realizing what they are doing. Consequently, we place shields on their hearts to prevent them from understanding it (the Quran), and deafness in their ears. Thus, no matter what you do to guide them, they can never ever be guided.
Shabbir Ahmed	18:57 And who does greater harm to himself than the one to whom his Lord's messages are conveyed and he turns away from them, forgetting what he is doing and what wrong he has done before? Our law makes their hearts and ears impermeable to reason and advice. No matter what you do to guide them, they will not allow themselves to be shown the right way.

Muhammad Asad - The Message Of Quran

Muhammad Asad - End Note 1 (18:1)

Lit., "and has not given it any deviousness". The term `iwaj signifies "crookedness", "tortuousness" or "deviation" (e.g., from a path), as well as "distortion" or "deviousness" in the abstract sense of these words. The above phrase is meant to establish the direct, unambiguous character of the Qur'an and to stress its freedom from all obscurities and internal contradictions: cf. 4:82-"Had it issued from any but God, they would surely have found in it many an inner contradiction!"

Muhammad Asad - End Note 2 (18:5)

Most of the classical commentators (and, as far as I am aware, all the earlier translators of the Qur'an) relate the pronoun in bihi to the assertion that "God has taken unto Himself a son", and hence take the phrase to mean, "They have no knowledge of it", i.e., no knowledge of such a happening. However, this interpretation is weak inasmuch as absence of knowledge does not necessarily imply an objective negation of the fact to which it relates. It is, therefore, obvious that bihi cannot signify "of it": it signifies "of Him", and relates to God. Hence, the phrase must be rendered as above - meaning that they who make such a preposterous claim have no real knowledge of Him, since they attribute to the Supreme Being something that is attributable only to created, imperfect beings. This interpretation is supported, in an unequivocal manner, by Tabari and, as an alternative, by Baydawi.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 3 (18:6)

Lit., "it may well be that thou wilt. . .", etc. However, the particle la'alla does not, in this context, indicate a possibility but, rather, a rhetorical question implying a reproach for the attitude referred to (Maraghi XIII, 116).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 4 (18:6)

This rhetorical question is addressed, in the first instance, to the Prophet, who was deeply distressed by the hostility which his message aroused among the pagan Meccans, and suffered agonies of apprehension regarding their spiritual fate. Beyond that, however, it applies to everyone who, having become convinced of the truth of an ethical proposition, is dismayed at the indifference with which his social environment reacts to it.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 5 (18:7)

Lit., "We have made all that exists on earth as its adornment in order that We might put them [i.e., all human beings] to a test": meaning that God lets them reveal their real characters in their respective attitudes - moral or immoral - towards the material goods and benefits which the world offers them. In further analysis, this passage implies that the real motive underlying men's refusal to believe in God's spiritual message (see preceding verse) is almost always their excessive, blind attachment to the good of this world, combined with a false pride in what they regard as their own achievements (cf. 16:22 and the corresponding note 15).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 6 (18:9)

This interpolation establishes the elliptically implied connection between the long passage that follows and the preceding two verses.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 7 (18:9)

Lit., "that the Men of the Cave ... were more wondrous.. .", etc. -the implication being that the allegory or parable based on this story is entirely in tune with the ethical doctrine propounded in the Qur'an as a whole, and therefore not "more wondrous" than any other of its statements. - As regards the story of the Men of the Cave as such. most of the commentators incline to the view that it relates to a phase in early Christian history - namely, the persecution of the Christians by Emperor Decius in the third century. Legend has it that some young Christians of Ephesus, accompanied by their dog, withdrew into a secluded cave in order to be able to live in accordance with their faith, and remained there, miraculously asleep. for a great length of time (according to some accounts, referred to in verse 25 of this surah. for about three centuries). When they finally awoke - unaware of the long time during which they had lain asleep - they sent one of their company to the town to purchase some food. In the meantime the situation had changed entirely: Christianity was no longer persecuted and had even become the official religion of the Roman Empire. The ancient coin (dating from the reign of Decius) with which the young man wanted to pay for his purchases immediately aroused curiosity; people began to question the stranger, and the story of the Men of the Cave and their miraculous sleep came to light. As already mentioned, the majority of the classical commentators rely on this Christian legend in their endeavour to interpret the Qur'anic reference (in verses 9-26) to the Men of the Cave. It seems, however, that the Christian formulation of this theme is a later development of a much older oral tradition -a tradition which, in fact, goes back to pre-Christian, Jewish sources. This is evident from several well-authenticated ahadith (mentioned by all the classical commentators), according to which it was the Jewish rabbis (ahbar) of Medina who induced the Meccan opponents of Muhammad to "test his veracity" by asking him to explain, among other problems, the story of the Men of the Cave. Referring to these ahadith, Ibn Kathir remarks in his commentary on verse 13 of this surah: "It has been said that they were followers of Jesus the son of Mary, but God knows it better: it is obvious that they lived much earlier than the Christian period-for, had they been Christians, why should the Jewish rabbis have been intent on preserving their story, seeing that the Jews had cut themselves off from all friendly communion with them [i.e., the Christians]?" We may, therefore, safely assume that the legend of the Men of the Cave - stripped of its Christian garb and the superimposed Christian background - is, substantially, of Jewish origin. If we discard the later syncretic additions and reduce the story to its fundamentals-voluntary withdrawal from the world, a long "sleep" in a secluded cave and a miraculous "awakening" after an indeterminate period of time-we have before us a striking allegory relating to a movement which played an important role in Jewish religious history during the centuries immediately preceding and following the advent of Jesus: namely, the ascetic Essene Brotherhood (to which, as I have pointed out in note 42 on 3:52, Jesus himself may have belonged), and particularly that of its branches which lived in self-imposed solitude in the vicinity of the Dead Sea and has recently, after the discovery of the Dead Sea Scrolls, come to be known as the "Qumran community". The expression ar-ragim occurring in the above Qur'an -verse (and rendered by me as "scriptures") lends strong support to this theory. As recorded by Tabari, some of the earliest authorities-and particularly Ibn'Abbas-regarded this expression as synonymous with marqum ("something that is written") and hence with kitab ("a writ" or "a scripture"); and Razi adds that "all rhetoricians and Arabic philologists assert that ar-ragim signifies [the same as] al-kitab". Since it is historically established that the members of the Qumran community-the strictest group among the Essenes-devoted themselves entirely to the study, the copying and the preservation of the sacred scriptures, and since they lived in complete seclusion from the rest of the world and were highly admired for their piety and moral purity, it is more than probable that their mode of life made so strong an impression on the imagination of their more worldly co-religionists that it became gradually allegorized in the story of the Men of the Cave who "slept"-that is, were cut off from the outside world-for countless years, destined to be "awakened" after their spiritual task was done. But whatever the source of this legend, and irrespective of whether it is of Jewish or Christian origin, the fact remains that it is used in the Qur'an in a purely parabolic sense: namely, as an illustration of God's power to bring about death (or "sleep") and resurrection (or "awakening"); and, secondly, as an allegory of the piety that induces men to abandon a wicked or frivolous world in order to keep their faith unsullied, and of God's recognition of that faith by His bestowal of a spiritual awakening which transcends time and death.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 8 (18:10)

Lit., "and provide for us, out of our condition (min amrina), consciousness of what is right" - which latter phrase gives the meaning of the term rushd in this context. This passage is a kind of introduction to the allegory of the Men of the Cave, giving a broad outline of what is expounded more fully in verses 13 ff.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 9 (18:11)

I.e., God caused them to remain cut off -physically or metaphorically -from the sounds and the bustle of the outside world. The classical commentators take the above phrase to mean that God "veiled their ears with sleep".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 10 (18:12)

Or: "sent them forth"-which may indicate a return to the active life of this world.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 11 (18:12)

Lit., "so that We might take cognizance of": but since God embraces all past, present and future with His knowledge, His "taking cognizance" of an event denotes His causing it to come into being and, thus, allowing it to become known by His creatures: hence. "marking it out" to the world.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 12 (18:12)

Lit., "which of the two parties" - alluding, metonymically, to the two viewpoints mentioned in verse 19 below - "was better at computing the time-span . . .", etc.: it should, however, be borne in mind that the verb ahsa does not merely signify "he computed" or "reckoned", but also "he understood" or "comprehended" (Taj al-'Arus). Since a "computing" of the time which those seekers after truth had spent in the cave could have no particular bearing on the ethical implications of this parable, ahsa has here obviously the meaning of "better at comprehending" or "showing a better comprehension" - namely, of the spiritual meaning of the time-lapse between their "falling asleep" and their "awakening" (see note 25 below).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 13 (18:13)

I.e., without the many legendary embellishments which, in times past, have obscured the purport of this story or parable.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 14 (18:13)

Lit., "We increased [or "advanced"] them in guidance".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 15 (18:14)

Lit., "when they stood up" -i.e., stood up to their misguided fellow-men, or to the rulers who persecuted the believers (see note 7).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 16 (18:15)

Lit., "Why do they not. ..", etc., in the form of a rhetorical query introducing a new sentence.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 17 (18:15)

Lit., "any clear evidence [or "authority"] in their support". The adjective bayyin ("clear", "obvious", "manifest") implies an evidence accessible to reason.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 18 (18:15)

Le., invents imaginary deities and thus gives the lie to the truth of His oneness and uniqueness, or even denies His existence altogether.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 19 (18:16)

The term mirfaq signifies "anything by which one benefits", whether concrete or abstract; in this context it has obviously a spiritual connotation, marking the young men's abandonment of the world and withdrawal into utter seclusion.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 20 (18:17)

Lit., "while they were in a broad cleft thereof". The cave evidently opened to the north, so that the heat of the sun never disturbed them: and this, I believe is an echo of the many Qur'anic allusions to the happiness of the righteous in paradise, symbolized by its "everlasting shade" (see, in particular, surah 4, note 74, on the metaphorical use of the term zill in the sense of "happiness").

Muhammad Asad - End Note 21 (18:18)

I.e., an accidental onlooker would immediately have felt the mystic, awe-inspiring aura that surrounded the Men of the Cave, and would have become conscious that he stood before God's elect (Tabari, Razi, Ibn Kathir, Baydawi).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 22 (18:19)

See note 10 above.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 23 (18:19)

It seems to me that the prefix li in li-yatasa'alu (which most commentators take to mean "so that they might ask one another") is not a particle denoting a purpose ("so that") but, rather, a lam al-agibah - that is, a particle indicating no more than a causal sequence - which in this context may be brought out by the phrase "and they began. . .", etc.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 24 (18:19)

Cf. 2:259, where exactly the same question is asked and exactly the same wondering answer is given in the parable of the man whom God caused to be dead for a hundred years and thereupon brought back to life. The striking verbal identity of question and answer in the two passages is obviously not accidental: it points, in a deliberately revealing manner, to the identity of the idea underlying these two allegories: namely, God's power to "bring forth the living out of that which is dead, and the dead out of that which is alive" (3:27, 6:95, 10:31, 30:19), i.e., to create life, to cause it to disappear and then to resurrect it. Beyond this, the above verse alludes to the deceptive, purely earthbound character of the human concept of "time".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 25 (18:19)

Le., they understood - in contrast to their companions, who were merely concerned what had "actually" happened to them-that the lapse of time between their "falling asleep" and their "awakening" had no reality of its own and no meaning, just as it has no reality or meaning in connection with a human being's death and subsequent resurrection (cf. 17:52 and the corresponding note 59): and this explains the reference to the "two viewpoints" (lit., "two parties") in verse 12 above.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 26 (18:20)

During their "sleep", time had stood still for the Men of the Cave, and so they assumed that the outside world had remained unchanged and was, as before, hostile to them. - At this point, the story as such ends abruptly (for, as we know, the Qur'an is never concerned with narratives for their own sake) and is revealed in the sequence as an allegory of death and resurrection and of the relativity of "time" as manifested in man's consciousness.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 27 (18:21)

I.e., by means of the legend which has grown up around the Men of the Cave and, more particularly, by means of the allegoric use which the Qur'an makes of this legend.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 28 (18:21)

Lit., "given knowledge about them [to others]".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 29 (18:21)

Lit., "debate their case (amrahum) among themselves": an indication of the fact that the legend of the Men of the Cave occupied men's minds for a long time, leading to many discussions and conflicting interpretations. The next sentence explains why God has "drawn [people's] attention" to this story in the context of the Qur'an.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 30 (18:21)

This, to my mind, is the meaning of the expression `alayhim (lit., "over them") occurring here as well as in the subsequent reference to the building of a house of worship at the suggestion of those "whose opinion prevailed in the end" (aliadhina ghalabu `ala amrihim).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 31 (18:22)

The future tense in sayagulun points once again to the legendary character of the story as such, and implies that all speculation about its details is irrelevant to its parabolic, ethical purport.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 32 (18:22)

Le., for the sake of the self-evident ethical lesson to be derived from their story: an allusion to the first paragraph of verse 21 above.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 33 (18:24)

According to almost all of the commentators, this parenthetical passage (verses 23-24) is primarily addressed to the Prophet, who, on being asked by some of the pagan Quraysh as to what "really" happened to the Men of the Cave, is said to have replied, "I shall give you my answer tomorrow" - whereupon revelation was temporarily withheld from him in token of God's disapproval; in the second instance, this exhortation expresses a general principle addressed to all believers.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 34 (18:25)

This obviously connects with the "idle guesses" mentioned in the first paragraph of verse 22 above - guesses refuted by the subsequent statements, "My Sustainer knows best how many they were" in verse 22, and "God knows best how long they remained [there]" in verse 26. This was, in particular, the view of `Abd Allah ibn Mas'ud, whose copy of the Qur'an is said to have contained the words, "And they [i.e., some people] said, `They remained.. .'," etc. (which was probably a marginal, explanatory remark added by Ibn Mas'ud), as well as of Qatadah and of Matar al-Warraaq (Tabari, Zamakhshari and Ibn Kathir). My interpolation, at the beginning of the verse, of the words "some people asserted" is based on the word galu ("they said") used by Ibn Mas'ud in his marginal note.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 35 (18:27)

According to Razi, it is on this passage, among others, that the great Qur'an commentator Abu Muslim al-Isfahani based his rejection of the so-called "doctrine of abrogation" discussed in my note 87 on 2:106.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 36 (18:28)

The expression suradiq - rendered by me as "billowing folds" - literally denotes an awning or the outer covering of a tent, and alludes here to the billowing "walls of smoke" that will surround the sinners (Zamakhshari): a symbolism meant to stress the inescapability of their suffering in the hereafter (Razi).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 41 (18:31)

Like all other Qur'anic descriptions of happenings in the hereafter, the above reference to the "adornment" of the believers with gold and jewels and silk (cf. similar passages in 22:23, 35:33 and 76:21) and their "reclining upon couches (ara'ik)" is obviously an allegory - in this case, an allegory of the splendour, the ever-fresh life (symbolized by "green garments"), and the restful fulfilment that awaits them in result of the many acts of self-denial which their faith had imposed on them during their earthly life. - Referring to the symbolism of these joys of paradise, - Razi draws our attention to the difference in the construction of the two parts of this clause: the first part is in the passive form ("they will be adorned. . .") and the second, in the active ("they will wear. . ."). In his opinion, the active form alludes to what the righteous will have earned by virtue of their deeds, whereas the passive form denotes all that will be bestowed on them by God above and beyond their deserts.

This short reference to the oft-repeated allegory of God's command to the angels to "prostrate themselves before Adam" is meant, in the above context, to stress man's inborn faculty of conceptual thinking (see 2:31-34 and the corresponding notes) and, thus, his ability and obligation to discern between right and wrong. Since man's deliberate choice of a morally wrong course - of which the preceding passages speak - is almost invariably due to his exaggerated attachment to the allurements of worldly life, attention is drawn here to the fact that this attachment is the means by which Satan (or Iblis) induces man to forgo all moral considerations and thus brings about his spiritual ruin.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 57 (18:51)

The particle idh (which usually signifies "when", but is, I believe, properly rendered here as "lo!") often serves in the Qur'an to draw attention to a sudden turn in the discourse, without, however, involving a break in the continuity of thought. In this instance, it evidently marks a connection with verse 54 above ("many facets have We given in this Qur'an to every kind of lesson [designed] for [the benefit of] mankind"), and introduces an allegory meant to illustrate the fact that knowledge, and particularly spiritual knowledge, is inexhaustible, so that no human being - not even a prophet - can ever claim to possess answers to all the questions that perplex man throughout his life. (This idea is brought out fully in the last two verses of this surah.) The subsequent parable of Moses and his quest for knowledge (verses 60-82) has become, in the course of time, the nucleus of innumerable legends with which we are not concerned here. We have, however, a Tradition on the authority of Ubayy ibn Ka'b (recorded in several versions by Bukhari, Muslim and Tirmidhi), according to which Moses was rebuked by God for having once asserted that he was the wisest of all men, and was subsequently told through revelation that a "servant of God" who lived at the "junction of the two seas" was far superior to him in wisdom. When Moses expressed his eagerness to find that man, God commanded him to "take a fish in a basket" and to go on and on until the fish would disappear: and its disappearance was to be a sign that the goal had been reached. -There is no doubt that this Tradition is a kind of allegorical introduction to our Qur'anic parable. The "fish" mentioned in the latter as well as in the above-mentioned hadith is an ancient religious symbol, possibly signifying divine knowledge or life eternal. As for the "junction of the two seas", which many of the early commentators endeavoured to "identify" in geographical terms (ranging from the meeting of the Red Sea and the Indian Ocean at the Bab al-Mandab to that of the Mediterranean Sea and the Atlantic Ocean at the Straits of Gibraltar), Baydawi offers, in his commentary on verse 60, a purely allegorical explanation: the "two seas" represent the two sources or streams of knowledge - the one obtainable through the observation and intellectual coordination of outward phenomena (`ilm az-zahir), and the other through intuitive, mystic insight (`ilm al-batin) -the meeting of which is the real goal of Moses' quest.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 69 (18:61)

Lit., "burrowing [into it]". Their forgetting the symbolic "fish" (see last third of note 67) is perhaps an allusion to man's frequently forgetting that God is the ultimate source of all knowledge and life.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 70 (18:63)

Lit., "Didst thou see?" Although formulated as a question, this idiomatic phrase often expresses - as does its modern equivalent, "Would you believe it?" - no more than a sudden remembrance of, or surprise at, an unusual or absurd happening.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 71 (18:63)

Lit., "made me forget it lest I remember it".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 72 (18:64)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 73 (18:65)

In the Tradition on the authority of Ubayy ibn Ka'b (referred to in note 67) this mysterious sage is spoken of as Al-Khadir or Al-Khidr, meaning "the Green One". Apparently this is an epithet rather than a name, implying (according to popular legend) that his wisdom was ever-fresh ("green") and imperishable: a notion which bears out the assumption that we have here an allegoric figure symbolizing the utmost depth of mystic insight accessible to man.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 74 (18:68)

Lit., "that, thou dost not encompass with [thy] experience (khubran)": according to Razi, an allusion to the fact that even a prophet like Moses did not fully comprehend the inner reality of things (haga'iq at-ashya' kama hiya); and, more generally, to man's lack of equanimity whenever he is faced with something that he has never yet experienced or cannot immediately comprehend. In the last analysis, the above verse implies -as is brought out fully in Moses' subsequent experiences - that appearance and reality do not always coincide; beyond that, it touches in a subtle manner upon the profound truth that man cannot really comprehend or even visualize anything that has no counterpart - at least in its component elements - in his own intellectual experience: and this is the reason for the Qur'anic use of metaphor and allegory with regard to "all that is beyond the reach of a created being's perception" (al-ghayb).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 80 (18:82)

Implying that whatever he had done was done under the impulsion of a higher truth-the mystic insight which revealed to him the reality behind the outward appearance of things and made him a conscious particle in God's unfathomable plan: and this explains the use of the plural "we" in verses 80-81, as well as the direct attribution, in the first paragraph of verse 82, of a concrete human action to God's will (Razi).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 81 (18:83)

Lit., "I will convey unto you a remembrance [or "mention"] of him" - i.e., something that is worthy of remembrance and mention: which, I believe, is an allusion to the parabolic character of the subsequent story and the fact that it is confined, like the preceding parable of Moses and the unknown sage, to a few fundamental, spiritual truths.-The epithet Dhu 'l-Qarnayn signifies "the Two-Horned One" or "He of the Two Epochs", since the noun qarn has the meaning of "horn" as well as of "generation" or "epoch" or "age" or "century". The classical commentators incline to the first of these meanings ("the Two-Horned"); and in this they appear to have been influenced by the ancient Middle-Eastern imagery of "horns" as symbols of power and greatness, although the Qur'an itself does not offer any warrant for this interpretation. In fact, the term qarn (and its plural qurun) occurs in the Qur'an -apart from the combination Dhu 'l-Qarnayn appearing in verses 83, 86 and 94 of this surah - twenty times: and each time it has the meaning of "generation" in the sense of people belonging to one particular epoch or civilization. However, since the allegory of Dhu 'l-Qarnayn is meant to illustrate the qualities of a powerful and just ruler, it is possible to assume that this designation is an echo of the above-mentioned ancient symbolism, which - being familiar to the Arabs from very early times - had acquired idiomatic currency in their language long before the advent of Islam. Within the context of our Qur'anic allegory, the "two horns" may be taken to denote the two sources of power with which Dhu 'l-Qarnayn is said to have been endowed: namely, the worldly might and prestige of kingship as well as the spiritual strength resulting from his faith in God. This last point is extremely important-for it is precisely the Qur'anic stress on his faith in God that makes it impossible to identify Dhu 'l-Qarnayn, as most of the commentators do, with Alexander the Great (who is represented on some of his coins with two horns on his head) or with one or another of the pre-Islamic, Himyaritic kings of Yemen. All those historic personages were pagans and worshipped a plurality of deities as a matter of course, whereas our Dhu 'l-Qarnayn is depicted as a firm believer in the One God: indeed, it is this aspect of his personality that provides the innermost reason of the Qur'anic allegory. We must, therefore, conclude that the latter has nothing to do with history or even legend, and that its sole purport is a parabolic discourse on faith and ethics, with specific reference to the problem of worldly power (see the concluding passage in the introductory note to this surah).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 82 (18:84)

According to Ibn `Abbas, Mujahid, Sa'id ibn Jubayr, `Ikrimah, Qatadah and Ad-Dahhak (all of them quoted by Ibn Kathir), the term sabab - lit., "a means to achieve [anything]" - denotes, in this context, the knowledge of the right means for the achievement of a particular end.

Or: "abundance of water" - which, according to many philologists (cf. Taj al-'Arus), is one of the meanings of `ayn (primarily denoting a "spring"). As for my rendering of the phrase "he found it (wajadaha) setting...", etc., as "it appeared to him that it was setting", see Razi and Ibn Kathir, both of whom point out that we have here a metaphor based on the common optical illusion of the sun's "disappearing into the sea"; and Razi explains this, correctly, by the fact that the earth is spherical. (It is interesting to note that, according to him, this explanation was already advanced in the - now lost - Qur'an -commentary of Abu `Ali al-Jubba'i, the famous Mu'tazili scholar who died in 303 H., which corresponds to 915 or 916 of the Christian era.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 86 (18:86)

This divine permission to choose between two possible courses of action is not only a metonymic statement of the freedom of will accorded by God to man, but establishes also the important legal principle of istihsan (social or moral preference) open to a ruler or government in deciding as to what might be conducive to the greatest good (maslahah) of the community as a whole: and this is the first "lesson" of the parable of Dhu 'l-Qarnayn.

This is Razi 's interpretation of the isolated expression kadhalika ("thus" or "thus it was") occurring here. It obviously relates to the primitive, natural state of those people who needed no clothes to protect them from the sun, and to the (implied) fact that Dhu 'l-Qarnayn left them as he had found them, being mindful not to upset their mode of life and thus to cause them misery.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 93 (18:91)

Lit., "all that was with him" - i.e., his resolve not to "corrupt [or "change"] God's creation" (cf. the second half of my note 141 on 4:119) -which, I believe, is a further ethical lesson to be derived from this parable.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 94 (18:93)

This is generally assumed to be the Caucasus. However, since neither the Qur'an nor any authentic Tradition says anything about the location of these "two mountain-barriers" or the people who lived there, we can safely dismiss all the speculations advanced by the commentators on this score as irrelevant, the more so as the story of Dhu 'l-Qarnayn aims at no more than the illustration of certain ethical principles in a parabolic manner.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 95 (18:94)

This is-the form in which these names (in Arabic, Yajuj and Majuj) have achieved currency in all European languages on the basis of certain vague references to them in the Bible (Genesis x,2, I Chronicles i, 5, Ezekiel xxxviii, 2 and xxxix, 6, Revelation of St. John xx, 8). Most of the post-classical commentators identify these tribes with the Mongols and Tatars (see note 100 below).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 96 (18:95)

It is generally assumed that the phrase "that wherein my Sustainer has so securely established me (makkanni)" refers to the power and wealth bestowed on him; but it is much more probable-and certainly more consistent with the ethical tenor of the whole parable of Dhu 'l-Qarnayn-that it refers to God's guidance rather than to worldly possessions.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 99 (18:98)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 100 (18:98)

Some of the classical commentators (e.g., Tabari) regard this as a prediction of a definite, historic event: namely, the future break-through of the savage tribes of "Gog and Magog", who are conceived of as identical with the Mongols and Tatars (see note 95 above). This "identification" is mainly based on a well-authenticated Tradition-recorded by Ibn Hanbal, Bukhari and Muslim -which tells us that the Apostle of God had a prophetic dream to which he referred, on awakening, with an exclamation of distress: "There is no deity save God! Woe unto the Arabs from a misfortune that is approaching: a little gap has been opened today in the rampart of Gog and Magog!" Ever since the late Middle Ages, Muslims have been inclined to discern in this dream a prediction of the great Mongol invasion in the thirteenth century, which destroyed the Abbasid Empire and, thus, the political power of the Arabs. However, the mention, in verses 99-101 of this surah, of "the Day" - i.e., the Day of Judgment - in connection with "Gog and Magog" shows that "the time appointed by my Sustainer" relates to the coming of the Last Hour, when all works of man will be destroyed. But since none of the Qur'anic references to the "approach" or the "nearness" of the Last Hour has anything to do with the human concept of time, it is possible to accept both of the above interpretations as equally valid in the sense that the "coming of the Last Hour" comprises an indefinite - and, in human terms, perhaps even immensely long- span of time, and that the break-through of the godless forces of "Gog and Magog" was to be one of the signs of its approach. And, finally, it is most logical to assume (especially on the basis of 21:96-97) that the terms Yajuj and Majuj are purely allegorical, applying not to any specific tribes or beings but to a series of social catastrophes which would cause a complete destruction of man's civilization before the coming of the Last Hour.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 101 (18:99)

Although each of their good actions will be taken into account on Judgment Day in accordance with the Qur'anic statement that "he who shall have done an atom's weight of good, shall behold it" (99:7), the above verse implies that whatever good such sinners may do is far outweighed by their godlessness (Al-Qadi `Iyad, as quoted by Razi).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 105 (18:109)

Intellect and revelation: The Two Streams of knowledge

Shabbir Ahmed - End Note 23 (18:61)

Moses became more concerned about his people in bondage. Interestingly, fish is an ancient symbol of worldly life with all its glitter

Shabbir Ahmed - End Note 24 (18:65)

A close examination of verses 60-65 is quite revealing. From this point on the young friend suddenly disappears. Also consider the way the fish disappeared, and how then, Moses remarks, "That is what we were seeking". I agree with Allama Muhammad Asad that the 'fish' here is only figurative. I also understand that the young friend of Moses is none else but his own youthful enthusiasm taking him to a great quest. Then in 18:64 Moses goes back retracing his footsteps. So, what happens next is most probably his deep contemplation at rest. The mystical story is worth pondering. The enlightened man who meets Moses at this juncture, and later his weird actions, definitely grant him an allegorical and not a tangible presence. For these reasons I think that in 18:60-82, the Qur'an is relating the intellectual search of Moses rather than his physical experience

Shabbir Ahmed - End Note 25 (18:82)

As the pondering was over, Moses understood that revelation is to the intellect what the sunlight is to the eye. Thus, was completed his intellectual journey. Later on Moses was commissioned to prophethood and experienced the Divine revelation first hand

Shabbir Ahmed - End Note 26 (18:85)

Zul-Qarnain = King Cyrus the Great of Persia, 590-529 BC

Shabbir Ahmed - End Note 27 (18:87)

Note King Cyrus talking in the royal manner, "We" and reflect on the King of kings, God, using "I" and "We" for Himself

Shabbir Ahmed - End Note 28 (18:88)

'Amal Saaleh = Act of social welfare = Helping others = Increasing the societal potential = Fulfilling needs

Shabbir Ahmed - End Note 29 (18:89)

He set forth to an expedition towards the East

Shabbir Ahmed - End Note 30 (18:90)

The nomads there built no houses or tents

Shabbir Ahmed - End Note 31 (18:91)

He helped those people with his abundant resources that God had given him

Shabbir Ahmed - End Note 32 (18:92)

Shabbir Ahmed - End Note 33 (18:94)

21:96

Shabbir Ahmed - End Note 34 (18:98)

The barrier will stay in place and crumble according to Divine laws

Shabbir Ahmed - End Note 35 (18:99)

Gog and Magog, the powerful imperialist nations, will attack one another and the weaker nations, and great wars will take place

Shabbir Ahmed - End Note 36 (18:102)

No matter what coalitions they make, if they befriend systems other than the Divine Order, they will end up in Hell

Shabbir Ahmed - End Note 37 (18:104)

They work in the wrong cause, contrary to the Divine reminder

Shabbir Ahmed - End Note 38 (18:109)

31:27

Edip-Layth - Quran: A Reformist Translation

Edip-Layth - End Note 1 (18:8)

The young monotheists, wrongly known as the "seven sleepers," are closely connected to the end of the world, as it is expressed in 18:9-21.

Edip-Layth - End Note 2 (18:9)

These 19 verses contain numerous key words that strongly imply that the story of the cave have double meaning like the verses in chapter 74, and the second meaning is about a prophecy of a mathematical miracle. I have already observed examples of a hidden mathematical design and God the most Wise will unveil it when the right time comes. When the secrets contained in the cave is revealed by divine permission, it will prove once again the truth in the assertion at 18:27.

Edip-Layth - End Note 3 (18:16)

If these youngsters escaped from the persecution of the Church that made the polytheistic doctrine of the Trinity the official doctrine of Christianity through the Nicene conference in 325 AC, then they woke up just after Muhammad and his supporters immigrated to Yathrib.

Edip-Layth - End Note 4 (18:21)

The numbers related to this event shed light on the question regarding the end of the world. See 18:25.

Edip-Layth - End Note 5 (18:22)

The popular number, seven, is not the correct one.

Edip-Layth - End Note 6 (18:25)

Through a unique expression, $300+9$, God provides us with the period of their stay in the cave in both the solar and lunar calendars. Three hundred solar years corresponds to three hundred and nine lunar years. See 15:87 and 72:27.

Edip-Layth - End Note 7 (18:29)

Islam recognizes the freedom to reject the message of the Quran. This freedom is guaranteed. See 2:193,256; 10:99; 80:12; 88:21,22.

Edip-Layth - End Note 8 (18:32)

The Quran gives examples of many false gods, idolized by people; such as children (7:90), religious leaders and scholars (9:31), money and wealth (18:42), dead saints and prophets (16:20,21; 35:14; 46:5,6), and wishful thinking (25:43, 45:23). Satan, in order to infect his subject with polytheism, first introduced a deficient and false definition of polytheism (shirk) thereby eliminating any potential self-criticism mechanism. Therefore, polytheists, generally reject the fact that they are polytheists (6:23; 6:148; 16:35). See 19:81.

Edip-Layth - End Note 9 (18:44)

In opposition to this verse, Shiite teachings require people to accept the authority of mullahs under the term "walayat-I faqih," that is "the authority of religious scholars."

Edip-Layth - End Note 10 (18:50)

Perhaps the events that tested God's creation in paradise (38:69), resulted in their classification as angels, jinns and humans. See 2:34.

Edip-Layth - End Note 11 (18:80)

The lesson we are taught is that we should not be hasty in making judgment of certain events based on limited information. We cannot make a right judgment of characters of an action movie just by looking at a clip of a few seconds.

Edip-Layth - End Note 12 (18:90)

Is it a description of a desert?

Edip-Layth - End Note 13 (18:94)

Because of the link with the end of the world, the verses can be understood as prophetic narratives of future events, rather than historical information. The Quran occasionally uses the past tense as a style of telling future events, to emphasize their inevitability. Can we understand this passage as an international civilization led by a just and peaceful leader that lasted for two generations, and just before the end of the world the two hostile nations will regain their power and attack that civilization?

Edip-Layth - Quran: A Reformist TranslationEdip-Layth - End Note 1 (19:1)

K20H5Y10A70S90. These combinations of five letters/numbers plays an important role in the mathematical system of the Quran based on code 19. See 74:1-56; 1:1; 2:1; 13:38; 27:82; 38:1-8; 40:28-38; 46:10; 72:28.

Edip-Layth - End Note 2 (19:7)

The word samiyya has been mistranslated as "name" while it means "likeness" or "similar." The verse does not state the uniqueness of Yahya (John) as a name, but the uniqueness of Yahya's person. See 19:65. Luke 1:61 makes an assertion regarding the uniqueness of the name, but Matt 11:11 refers to the uniqueness of John (Yahya) in terms of personal qualities, which is what the Quran refers to.

Edip-Layth - End Note 3 (19:15)

The repetition of the word day (yawm) three times, besides emphasis, is also linked to the numerical structure of the Quran. The word day (yawm), in its singular form, occurs exactly 365 times in the Quran. See 9:36.

Edip-Layth - End Note 4 (19:24)

The recommendation to Mary has medical benefits. The sound of water and mature dates have a regulating effect on human muscles and thus reduce the birth pain. Indeed, some modern birth clinics provide birth-in-water services. The oxytocin found in dates regulates contraction and stimulates lactation, and thus is given to pregnant women as a drug to ease their labor. See 4:82. This verse gives a clue regarding the season in which Jesus was born. In the Middle East, dates get ripe in the end of September, and in the beginning of October. Jesus was born in Nazareth, not Bethlehem (beit/house+lahm/meat) as a majority of Christians believe today. The information in the Gospels regarding the origin of his parents is contradictory; Luke points to Nazareth, while Matthew points to Bethlehem (Matthew 1:18-25; 2:1-12; Luke 2:4-7). Jesus was called the Nazarene in the New Testament (Mark 1:24,10:47,14:67,16:6), yet Christian scholars are not sure why he was called Nazarene. Perhaps, this is because the Old Testament does not mention Nazareth, but mentions Bethlehem (Genesis 35:16,19; 48:7; Ruth 4:11; 1 Samuel 17:12; 2 Samuel 23:13-17). Since we see the Gospel authors trying hard to find as many as prophecies from the Old Testament regarding the coming Messiah, the discrepancy and "mystery" between the name and the birthplace might be explained. The Old Testament praises Bethlehem for being the birthplace of the awaited ruler (Micah 5:2).

Edip-Layth - End Note 5 (19:36)

The New Testament contains many verses from the mouth of Jesus rejecting his deity or multiple personality. For instance, in the following verse he could not be clearer in asserting his human nature, since he is equating his position with his audience in relation to God: "Jesus said unto her, Touch me not; for I am not yet ascended to my Father: but go to my brethren, and say unto them, I ascend unto my Father, and your Father; and to my God, and your God" John 20:17. Though the four Gospels were selected among hundreds of gospels by the Nicene conference to be the most in harmony with the polytheistic teaching of St. Paul, they still contain many more verses rejecting the idea of the Trinity or deity of Jesus than the few ones considered to be supportive of such blasphemous ideas. "I cannot do anything of myself. I judge as I hear, and my judgment is honest because I am not seeking my own will but the will of Him who sent me" (John 5:30). "Jesus said: 'My doctrine is not my own; it comes from Him who sent me'" (John 7:16). ". . . If you loved me, you would be glad that I am going to the Father, for the Father is greater than I" (John 14:28). "As Jesus started on his way, a man ran up to him and fell on his knees before him. 'Good teacher,' he asked, 'what must I do to inherit eternal life?' Jesus answered, 'Why do you call me good? No one is good--except God alone'" (Mark 10:17-18; Matthew 19:16-17; Luke 18:18-19). "Whoever welcomes me welcomes, not me, but Him who sent me" (Matthew 10:40; Mark 9:37; Luke 9:48 & John 13:20). ". . . I have not come of myself. I was sent by

One who has the right to send, and Him you do not know. I know Him because it is from Him I come; he sent me" (John 7:28-29). "'The most important one,' answered Jesus, 'is this: Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God, the Lord is one' " (Mark 12:29). "None of those who call me 'Lord' will enter the kingdom of God, but only the one who does the will of my Father in heaven" (Matthew 7:21). " . . . Go to my brothers and tell them, 'I am ascending to my Father and your Father, to my God and your God' " (John 20:17). Also, see 2:59; 3:45,51-52-52,55; 4:11,157,171; 5:72-79; 7:162; 19:36.

Polytheist (mushrik) leaders mentioned in the Quran are belligerent and aggressive characters. Abraham's father excommunicated Abraham and his people tried to kill him; Pharaoh and his people wished to kill Moses, Jews Jesus, Abu Jahl and his followers Muhammad. The Quran informs us that many messengers were killed by mushriks. Mushrik leaders who know well that their doctrine cannot survive the scrutiny of thinking and questioning minds, have always waged war and terror against messengers of God who invited to reason, questioned traditions and superstitions, and promoted peaceful coexistence. It is no coincidence that similar authoritarian, aggressive, warmongering characteristics are also common among modern polytheists, regardless of their religion.

Edip-Layth - End Note 7 (19:64)

See 20:52 and 7:51

Edip-Layth - End Note 8 (19:81)

Serving statues is only one of the many ways of committing idolatry or polytheism (7:138). Enjoying mentioning other names besides God's name (39:45), following the religious teachings of clergymen and scholars (9:31; 42:21; 6:148), expecting the intercession of messengers, prophets, and "saints" (2:48; 10:18), and believing that messengers and prophets were infallible (18:110), also fall into the category of idolatry. Despite these clear warnings, since mushriks are in a trance under the hypnosis of Satan, they still wish to deceive themselves as monotheists, since they follow a distorted popular message attributed to a popular monotheist (6:23). See 18:32-42.

Edip-Layth - End Note 9 (19:82)

This verse has multiple meanings. See 6:23 and 10:28.

Edip-Layth - End Note 10 (19:83)

See 14:22.

Edip-Layth - End Note 11 (19:87)

The Quran categorically rejects the idea of intercessor as an angel or human "savior" commonly believed by the majority of religious people (2:48; 10:18). In the Day of Judgment, the judgment completely belongs to God. The intercession that the Quran approves is no more than testifying the truth (78:38). Messengers and righteous people cannot save anyone who deserves punishment (9:80; 74:48). Muhammad's only intercession, ironically, will be a negative testimony about those who deserted the Quran by hoping for his intercession (25:30). See 2:48.

Edip-Layth - End Note 12 (19:97)

God uses our language, which is limited to our senses and experiences, to communicate His message to us, so that we understand it. Translations made by monotheists serve this purpose. See 41:44.

Muhammad Asad - The Message Of Quran

Muhammad Asad - End Note 1 (19:1)

See Appendix II.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 2 (19:2)

Lit., "An account of thy Sustainer's grace upon. ..", etc. According to the account in the Gospels, not contradicted by the Qur'an, Zachariah's wife Elisabeth was a cousin of Mary, the mother of Jesus (Cf. Luke i, 36).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 3 (19:3)

Lit., "with secret calling".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 4 (19:4)

Lit., "never have I been unfortunate in my prayer to Thee".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 5 (19:5)

Lit., "after me". He evidently anticipated that his kinsfolk-who, like himself, were priests attached to the Temple - would be morally too weak to fulfil their duties with dignity and conviction (Razi), and thus, perhaps, unable, to safeguard the future of Mary, whose guardian he was (cf. the first paragraph of 3:37).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 6 (19:7)

See 3:39.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 7 (19:7)

Lit., "Never before have We made a namesake for him". The name Yahya (John) signifies "he shall live", i.e., he will be spiritually alive and will be remembered forever; and the fact that God Himself had chosen this name for him was a singular distinction, equivalent to a divine promise (kalimah, cf. note 28 on 3:39).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 8 (19:9)

Lit., "when [or "although"] thou wert nothing". This stress on God's unlimited power to bring into being a new chain of causes and effects forms here, as in al `Imran, a preamble to the announcement, expressed in very similar terms, of the birth of Jesus (see verses 19 ff.).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 9 (19:10)

See 3:41 and the corresponding note 29.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 10 (19:12)

According to Razi, this is clearly implied inasmuch as the sequence presupposes that John had in the meantime reached an age which enabled him to receive and understand God's commandment.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 11 (19:13)

Lit., "compassion from Us"- i.e as a special divine gift.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 12 (19:16)

Lit., "in the divine writ". In this surah as well as in Al `Imran the story of the birth of John is followed by that of Jesus-firstly, because John (called "the Baptist" in the Bible) was to be a precursor of Jesus, and, secondly, because of the obvious parallelism in the form of the announcements of these two births.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 13 (19:17)

Apparently, in order to devote herself undisturbed to prayer and meditation. The "eastern place" may possibly, as Ibn Kathir suggests, signify an eastern chamber of the Temple, to the service of which Mary had been dedicated by her mother (cf. 3:35-37).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 14 (19:17)

As pointed out in surah 2, note 71, and surah 16, note 2, the term ruh often denotes "divine inspiration". Occasionally, however, it is used to describe the medium through which such inspiration is imparted to God's elect: in other words, the angel (or angelic force) of revelation. Since - as is implied in 6:9 - mortals cannot perceive an angel in his true manifestation, God caused him to appear to Mary "in the shape of a well-made human being", i.e., in a shape accessible to her perception. According to Razi, the designation of the angel as ruh ("spirit" or "soul") indicates that this category of beings is purely spiritual, without any physical element.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 15 (19:21)

Cf. the identical phrase in verse 9 above, relating to the announcement of John's birth to Zachariah. In both these cases, the implication is that God can and does bring about events which may be utterly unexpected or even inconceivable before they materialize. In connection with the announcement of a son to Mary, the Qur'an states in 3:47 that "when He wills a thing to be, He but says unto it, 'Be' -and it is": but since neither the Qur'an nor any authentic Tradition tells us anything about the chain of causes and effects (asbab) which God's decree "Be" was to bring into being, all speculation as to the "how" of this event must remain beyond the scope of a Qur'an-commentary. (But see also note 87 on 21:91.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 16 (19:21)

One of the several meanings of the term ayah is "a sign" or, as elaborately defined by Raghib, "a symbol" (cf. surah 17, note 2). However, the sense in which it is most frequently used in the Qur'an is "a [divine] message": hence, its metonymic application to Jesus may mean that he was destined to become a vehicle of God's message to man - i.e., a prophet- and, thus, a symbol of God's grace. - As regards the words "thou shalt have a son" interpolated by me between brackets, a statement to this effect is implied in the subsequent phrase beginning with "so that" (Zamakhshari and Razi).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 17 (19:23)

Le., compelling her to cling to it for support: thus stressing the natural, normal circumstances of this childbirth, attended-as is the case with all women-by severe labour pains.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 18 (19:24)

Or: "from beneath her". However, Qatadah (as quoted by Zamakhshari) interprets this as meaning "from beneath the palm-tree".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 19 (19:26)

Lit., "say"-but since actual speech would contradict what follows, the "saying" implies here a communication by gestures.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 20 (19:26)

In its primary sense, the term sawm denotes "abstinence" or "self-denial"; in the present context it is synonymous with samt ("abstinence from speech"); in fact-as pointed out by Zamakhshari-the latter term is said to have figured in the Qur'an-copy belonging to `Abd Allah ibn Mas'ud (possibly as a marginal, explanatory notation).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 21 (19:27)

Lit., "she came with him to her people, carrying him".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 22 (19:28)

In ancient Semitic usage, a person's name was often linked with that of a renowned ancestor or founder of the tribal line. Thus, for instance, a man of the tribe of Banu Tamim was sometimes addressed as "son of Tamim" or "brother of Tamim". Since Mary belonged to the priestly caste, and hence descended from Aaron, the brother of Moses, she was called a "sister of Aaron" (in the same way as her cousin Elisabeth, the wife of Zachariah, is spoken of in Luke i, 5, as one "of the daughters of Aaron").

Muhammad Asad - End Note 23 (19:30)

Although the Qur'an mentions in 3:46 that Jesus would "speak unto men [while yet] in his cradle" - i.e., would be imbued with wisdom from his early childhood - verses 30-33 seem to be in the nature of a trope, projecting the shape of things to come by using, for the sake of emphasis, the past tense to describe something that was to become real in the future. (See also next note.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 24 (19:30)

Since it is not conceivable that anyone could be granted divine revelation and made a prophet before attaining to full maturity of intellect and experience, `Ikrimah and Ad-Dahhak-as quoted by Tabari-interpret this passage as meaning, "God has decreed (qada) that he would vouchsafe unto me revelation. . .", etc., thus regarding it as an allusion to the future. Tabari himself applies the same interpretation to the next verse, explaining it thus: "He has decreed that He would enjoin upon me prayer and charity". However, the whole of this passage (verses 30-33) may also be understood as having been uttered by Jesus at a much later time-namely, after he had reached maturity and been actually entrusted with his prophetic mission: that is to say, it may be understood as an anticipatory description of the ethical and moral principles which were to dominate the adult life of Jesus and particularly his deep consciousness of being only "a servant of God".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 25 (19:34)

Lit., "about whom they are in doubt", or "about whom they [vainly] dispute": an allusion to the many conflicting views about the nature of Jesus and his origins, ranging from the blasphemous Jewish assertion that he was a "false prophet" and the product of a shameful, illicit union (cf. 4:156), to the Christian belief that he was "the son of God" and, therefore, God incarnate. In this connection, see also 3:59 and the corresponding note 47.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 26 (19:35)

See note 96 on 2:116.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 27 (19:36)

Cf. 3:51 and 43:64.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 28 (19:37)

I.e., either rejecting him entirely, as do the Jews, or-as is the case with the Christians deifying him.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 29 (19:37)

Lit., "from the manifestation (mashhad) of an awesome Day", i.e., the Day of Judgment.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 30 (19:40)

Lit., "We alone shall inherit the earth and all who are on it". For an explanation of this metaphoric use of the concept of "inheritance", see surah 15, note 22.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 31 (19:41)

The mention of Abraham and his subsequent, unavailing plea to his father to recognize God's oneness and uniqueness connects with the preceding discourse, under the same aspect, on the true nature of Jesus as a mortal human being and a mere servant of the One and Only God.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 32 (19:43)

I.e., a cognition of God's existence and uniqueness through intellectual insight (cf. 6:74-82).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 33 (19:44)

The absurdity inherent in the attribution of divine qualities to anything or anyone but God is here declared, by implication, to be equivalent to "worshipping" the epitome of unreason and ingratitude symbolized in Satan's rebellion against his Creator. In this connection it should be noted that the term shaytan is derived from the verb shatana, signifying "he was [or "became"] remote [from the truth]" (Lisan al-'Arab, Taj al-'Arus); hence, the Qur'an describes every impulse that inherently offends against truth, reason and morality as "satanic", and every conscious act of submission to such satanic influences as a "worship of Satan".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 34 (19:45)

According to Zamakhshari and Razi, the construction of this clause (beginning with "so that") is meant to bring out the idea that one's belated realization, in the hereafter, of having been "close unto Satan" is the most terrible consequence of deliberate sinning.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 35 (19:48)

Lit., "that I will not be unfortunate in the prayer to my Sustainer".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 36 (19:50)

Lit., "a lofty language of truth" or "of truthfulness"-the term lisan ("language" or "tongue") being used here metonymically for what may be pronounced by the tongue (Zamakhshari). An alternative interpretation of the phrase, advanced by many commentators, is "granted them 'a lofty renown for truth' or 'truthfulness', or simply 'a most goodly renown'".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 37 (19:51)

The mention of Moses and other prophets in this context serves to reinforce the statement that all of them - like Jesus - were but mortal servants of God whom He had inspired with His message to man (cf. verse 30 above). As regards the distinction between the terms "prophet" (nabi) and "apostle" (rasul), see the opening clause of 22:52 and the corresponding note 65.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 38 (19:52)

Le., to the right side-from the standpoint of Moses, as he was facing Mount Sinai (Tabari). However, it is much more probable that the term "right side" has here, as elsewhere in the Qur'an, the abstract connotation of "blessedness" (cf. note 25 on 74:39). For a fuller account of God's calling Moses to prophethood, see 20:9 ff.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 39 (19:54)

After the mention of Moses, who descended from Abraham through Isaac, we are reminded of Ishmael, Abraham's first-born son and the progenitor of the "northern" group of Arab tribes, and thus of the Prophet Muhammad, who descended in direct line, through the tribe of Quraysh, from Ishmael.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 40 (19:55)

This may perhaps mean that Ishmael was the first among the prophets to establish prayer and charity as obligatory forms of worship.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 41 (19:56)

The majority of the classical commentators identify the Prophet Idris-who is mentioned in the Qur'an once again, namely in 21:85-with the Biblical Enoch (Genesis v. 18-19 and 21-24), without, however, being able to adduce any authority for this purely conjectural identification. Some modern Qur'an-commentators suggest that the name Idris may be the Arabicized form of Osiris (which, in its turn, was the ancient Greek version of the Egyptian name As-ar or Us-ar), said to have been a wise king and/or prophet whom the Egyptians subsequently deified (cf. Maraghi XVI, 64, and Sayyid Qutb, Fi Zilal al - Qur'an, Cairo, n.d., vol. XVI, 44); but this assumption is too far-fetched to deserve any serious consideration. Finally, some of the earliest Qur'an-commentators (ʿAbd Allah ibn Mas'ud, Qatadah, ʿIkrimah and Ad-Dahhak) assert-with, to my mind, great plausibility-that "Idris" is but another name for Ilyas, the Biblical Elijah (regarding whom see note 48 on 37:123).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 42 (19:57)

As regards my rendering of rafa'nahu as "whom We exalted", see 3:55 and 4:158, where the same expression is used with reference to Jesus, as well as note 172 on the last-named verse.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 43 (19:58)

Whereas the Hebrew prophets. whose line ended with Jesus, descended from Abraham through Isaac and Israel (Jacob), Muhammad traced his descent from the same patriarch through the latter's first-born son, Ishmael.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 44 (19:58)

Le., all of the prophets were conscious of being no more than mortal, humble servants of God. (See also 32:15.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 45 (19:59)

Le., they will realize in the hereafter the full extent of the self-deception which has led to their spiritual ruin.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 46 (19:60)

Le., they will not only not be deprived of reward for the least of their good deeds, but will be granted blessings far beyond their actual deserts (cf. 4:40).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 47 (19:61)

This lengthy paraphrase of the expression bi'l-ghayb gives, I think, the closest possible interpretation of the idea underlying it: namely, the prospect of a reality which is inconceivable by man in terms of his worldly experiences, and which can, therefore, only be hinted at by means of allegorical allusions. (See also the first clause of 2:3 and the corresponding note 3.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 48 (19:62)

The term salam comprises the concepts of spiritual soundness and peace, freedom from faults and evils of any kind, and inner contentment. As I have pointed out in note 29 on 5:16 (where this term has been rendered, in a different context, as "salvation"), its closest-though by no means perfect-equivalent would be the French salut, in the abstract sense of that word, or the German Heil.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 49 (19:62)

Le., always. It is to be noted that the term rizq ("sustenance") applies to all that might be of benefit to a living being, spiritually as well as physically.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 50 (19:64)

Le., that which even the angels can only glimpse but not fully understand. Literally, the above phrase reads, "that which is between our hands and that which is behind us and that which is between these". Regarding this idiomatic expression, see 2:255 - "He knows all that lies open before men and all that is hidden from them"-and the corresponding note 247. The reference to the angels connects with the preceding mention of some of the earlier prophets who, like Muhammad, were recipients of divine revelation.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 51 (19:67)

Lit., "when for "although"] he was nothing".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 52 (19:68)

See surah 15, first half of note 16; cf. also the reference to the "worship of Satan" in verses 44-45 of the present surah, as well as the corresponding notes 33 and 34. The symbolism of the sinners being linked on Judgment Day "with the satanic forces which impelled them in life" is easily understood if we remember-as has been pointed out in note 10 on 2:14-that the term shaytan ("satan" or "satanic force") is often used in the Qur'an to describe every evil propensity in man's own self. The personal pronoun relates to those who reject the concept of resurrection and life after death.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 53 (19:69)

Le., those who have consciously and deliberately rejected the idea of man's responsibility before God and have thus led their weaker, less conscious fellow-men astray will be consigned to the deepest suffering in the hereafter.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 54 (19:70)

Lit., "of burning therein": an allusion to the fact that not every one of the sinners will be irrevocably consigned to the suffering described in the Qur'an as hell. (The particle thumma which introduces this clause has here the function of an explanatory conjunction with the preceding statement and is, therefore, best rendered as "for".)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 55 (19:71)

Lit., "none of you but will reach it". According to some of the classical authorities, the pronoun "you" relates to the sinners spoken of in the preceding passages, and particularly to those who refuse to believe in resurrection; the majority of the commentators, however, are of the opinion that all human beings, sinners and righteous alike, are comprised within this address in the sense that all "will come within sight of it": hence my rendering.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 56 (19:72)

For this particular rendering of thumma, see surah 6, note 31.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 57 (19:72)

I.e., utterly humbled and crushed by their belated realization of God's judgment and of the ethical truths which they had arrogantly neglected in life.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 58 (19:73)

Lit., "two groups" or "parties": an allusion to two kinds or types of human society characterized by their fundamentally different approach to problems of faith and morality. (See next note.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 59 (19:73)

Lit., "better in assembly". This parabolic "saying" of the unbelievers implies, in the garb of a rhetorical question, a superficially plausible but intrinsically fallacious argument in favour of a society which refuses to submit to any absolute moral imperatives and is determined to obey the dictates of expediency alone. In such a social order, material success and power are usually seen as consequences of a more or less conscious rejection of all metaphysical considerations-and, in particular, of all that is comprised in the concept of God-willed standards of morality-on the assumption that they are but an obstacle in the path of man's free, unlimited "development". It goes without saying that this attitude (which has reached its epitome in the modern statement that "religion is opium for the people") is diametrically opposed to the demand, voiced by every higher religion, that man's social life, if it is to be a truly "good" life, must be subordinated to definite ethical principles and restraints. By their very nature, these restraints inhibit the unprincipled power-drive which dominates the more materialistic societies and enables them to achieve - without regard to the damage done to others and, spiritually, to themselves-outward comforts and positions of strength in the shortest possible time: but precisely because they do act as a brake on man's selfishness and power-hunger, it is these moral considerations and restraints-and they alone-that can free a community from the interminable, self-destructive inner tensions and frustrations to which materialistic societies are subject, and thus bring about a more enduring, because more organic, state of social well-being. This, in short, is the elliptically implied answer of the Qur'an to a rhetorical question placed in the mouths of "those who are bent on denying the truth".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 60 (19:74)

Lit., "in property" or "abundance of property". In this context - as in the last verse of this surah -the term garn apparently signifies "people of one and the same epoch", i.e., a "civilization".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 61 (19:75)

Or: "grant him a respite", so that he might have a chance to realize the error of his ways and to repent: thus, every believer is enjoined to pray for those who are sinning.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 62 (19:75)

This interpolation refers to, and connects with, the "saying" of the deniers of the truth mentioned in verse 73 above (Zamakhshari).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 63 (19:75)

Lit., "in respect of support" or "of forces" (jundan) -an expression which, in this context, denotes both material resources and the ability to utilize them towards good ends.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 64 (19:76)

Lit., "God increases in guidance those who. ..", etc.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 65 (19:76)

Lit., "which are bets-K-thy Sustainer's sight as regards merit, and better as regards returns" (cf. 18:46.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 66 (19:77)

This is a further illustration of the attitude described in verses 73-75 (and referred to in note 59): namely, the insistence on material values to the exclusion of all moral considerations, and the conviction that worldly "success" is the only thing that really counts in life. As in many other places in the Qur'an, this materialistic concept of "success'" is metonymically equated with one's absorption in the idea of "wealth and children".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 67 (19:78)

In this context, the term al-ghayb denotes the unknowable future.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 68 (19:80)

Lit., "inherit from him" -a metaphor based on the concept of one person's taking over what once belonged to, or was vested in, another.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 69 (19:80)

I.e., bereft of any extraneous support, and thus depending on God's grace and mercy alone (cf. 6:94 as well as verse 95 of the present surah).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 70 (19:81)

This refers to the type of man spoken of in the preceding passage as well as in verses 73-75: people who "worship" wealth and power with an almost religious devotion, attributing to these manifestations of worldly success the status of divine forces.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 71 (19:83)

Lit., "the satans", by which term the Qur'an often describes all that is intrinsically evil, especially the immoral impulses in man's own soul (cf. note 10 on 2:14 and note 33 on verse 44 of the present surah).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 72 (19:83)

See note 31 on 15:41. According to Zamakhshari and Razi, the expression "We have let loose (arsalna) all [manner of] satanic forces (shayatin) upon those who deny the truth" has here the meaning of "We have allowed them to be active (khallayna) among them", leaving it to man's free will to accept or to reject those evil influences or impulses. Razi, in particular, points in this context to surah 14, verse 22, according to which Satan will thus address the sinners on Resurrection Day: "I had no power at all over you: I but called you -and you responded to me. Hence, blame not me, but blame yourselves." See also note 31 on 14:22, in which Razi's comment is quoted verbatim.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 73 (19:84)

Lit., "We number for them but a number". Cf. also the first sentence of verse 75 above.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 74 (19:87)

Lit., "except him who has.. .", etc. According to the classical commentators -including some of the most outstanding Companions of the Prophet-the "bond with God" denotes, in this context, the realization of His oneness and uniqueness; for the wider implications of this term, see surah 2, note 19. Consequently, as pointed out by Razi, even great sinners may hope for God's forgiveness - symbolically expressed by the right of "intercession" which will be granted to the prophets on Judgment Day (see note 7 on- 10:3)-provided that, during their life on earth, they were aware of God's existence and oneness.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 75 (19:88)

Lit., "And" (wa), connecting the present passage with verse 81.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 76 (19:88)

This allusion to the Christian belief in Jesus as "the son of God" - and, in general, to every belief in God's "incarnation" in a created being-takes up the theme broached in verse 81 above: namely, the deification of powers or beings other than God "with a view to their being a source of strength" to those who turn to them. But whereas verse 81 refers specifically to the godless who accord a quasi-divine status to material wealth and power and abandon themselves entirely to the pursuit of worldly success, the present passage refers to people who, while believing in God, deify prophets and saints, too, in the subconscious hope that they might act as "mediators" between them and the Almighty. Since this deification offends against the principle of God's transcendent oneness and uniqueness, it implies a breach of man's "bond with God" and, if consciously persisted in, constitutes an unforgivable sin (cf. 4:48 and 116).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 77 (19:92)

The idea that God might have a "son" - either in the real or in the metaphorical sense of this term - would presuppose a degree of innate likeness between "the father" and "the son": but God is in every respect unique, so that "there is nothing like unto Him" (42:11) and "nothing that could be compared with Him" (112:4). Moreover, the concept of "progeny" implies an organic continuation of the progenitor, or of part of him, in another being and, therefore, presupposes a degree of incompleteness before the act of procreation (or incarnation, if the term "sonship" is used metaphorically): and the idea of incompleteness, in whatever sense, negates the very concept of God. But even if the idea of "sonship" is meant to express no more than one of the different "aspects" of the One Deity (as is claimed in the Christian dogma of the "Trinity"), it is described in the Qur'an as blasphemous inasmuch as it amounts to an attempt at defining Him who is "sublimely exalted above anything that men may devise by way of definition" (see last sentence of 6:100).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 78 (19:93)

Le., all of them - whether men or angels - are but created beings, having no share whatever in His divinity, and all of them submit, consciously or' unconsciously, to His will (cf. 13:15 and 16:48-49).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 79 (19:95)

See note 69 above.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 80 (19:96)

Le., bestow on them His love and endow them with the capability to love His creation, as well as cause them to be loved by their fellow-men. As is shown in the next verse, this gift of love is inherent in the guidance offered to man through divine revelation.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 81 (19:97)

Since man is incapable of understanding the "word" of God as such, it has always been revealed to him in his own, human tongue (cf. 14:4-"never have We sent forth any apostle otherwise than [with a message] in his own people's tongue"), and has always been expounded in concepts accessible to the human mind: hence the reference to the Prophet's revelations as "brought down upon thy heart" (2:97), or "[divine inspiration] has alighted with it upon thy heart" (26:193-194).

Edip-Layth	20:72 They said, "We will not prefer you over the proofs that have come to us, and over the One who initiated us. So issue whatever judgment you have, for you only issue judgment in this worldly life."
The Monotheist Group	20:72 They said: "We will not prefer you over the proofs that have come to us, and over the One who initiated us. So issue whatever judgment you have, for you only issue judgment in this worldly life."
Muhammad Asad	20:72 They answered: "Never shall we prefer thee to all the evidence of the truth that has come unto us, nor to Him who has brought us into being! Decree, then, whatever thou art going to decree: thou canst decree only [something that pertains to] this worldly life!" ⁵⁵
Rashad Khalifa	20:72 They said, "We will not prefer you over the clear proofs that came to us, and over the One who created us. Therefore, issue whatever judgment you wish to issue. You can only rule in this lowly life."
Shabbir Ahmed	20:72 They answered, "Never shall we choose you above the clear evidence of the truth that has come to us, nor prefer you over Him Who brought us into being! So issue whatever decree you will. Your judgment can only touch us in this worldly life."

Edip-Layth - Quran: A Reformist Translation

Edip-Layth - End Note 1 (20:1)

T9H5. This combination of two letters/numbers plays an important role in the mathematical system of the Quran based on code 19. See 74:1-56; 1:1; 2:1; 13:38; 27:82; 38:1-8; 40:28-38; 46:10; 72:28.

Edip-Layth - End Note 2 (20:8)

See 7:180.

Edip-Layth - End Note 3 (20:14)

This short verse not only informs us that sala prayer did not start with Muhammad, but also provides important guidelines for correcting the many errors committed in traditional prayers. For instance, in our sala prayer we should not mention Muhammad or other names.

Edip-Layth - End Note 4 (20:15)

The information regarding end of the world is given by God (15:87). 020:017 Surely, God knew what was in Moses' hand. The following verses show that the question was a rhetorical one. See the Old Testament, Exodus 4:1-9.

Edip-Layth - End Note (20:17)

Edip-Layth - End Note 5 (20:20)

Where is the Moses who we met at 18:60- 82, who was so inquisitive? Here, when he hears God commanding him to throw away his valuable possession, his staff, he does not even utter one word demanding an explanation. What could be the reason for this change?

Edip-Layth - End Note 6 (20:41)

If similar statements used for Moses were used for Muhammad, they would become the most popular Quranic statements and would adorn the walls of every mosque. The Sunni and Shiite worshipers of Muhammad try hard to put Muhammad above all other prophets and messengers through fabricated hadith. According to a very popular hadith, God supposedly had said to Muhammad, Lawlaka lawlaka lama khalatqul aflaka (if it were not you, if it were not you, I would not have created the universes). Under the name Qudsi Hadith (Holy Hadith), clerics and their blind followers attribute many false statements directly to God. If you study the longest story told in Bukhari, there you will find Muhammad ascending and descending numerous times between the sixth and seventh heavens, between Moses and God, trying to get as much of a discount possible, in the number of prayers. This bargain between God and Muhammad, which was supervised by Moses, is reminded to the public at least once a year during the celebration of the "Night of Miraj." The message given to the audience is simple and polytheistic: "If it were not for Muhammad's bargain on your behalf, you would end up praying 50 times a day (one session every 28 minutes, day and night); and you would suffer greatly." Whether this story was originally made up by a Jew to insult the intelligence of Muhammad and exalt Moses, it is adopted by gullible Muhammedans to praise the mercy of their prophet (more merciful than God!), and to justify their belief in his power of intercession and negotiation with God on their behalf. The reporters and collectors of this story, including Bukhari, were the archenemies of prophet Muhammad and his monotheistic message. See 2:285; 3:159; 6:112; 68:42. For the struggle, leadership and message of this brave servant of God, see the books of Exodus and Deuteronomy in Old Testament. Psalms and Prophets too contain numerous references to Moses. For instance, see Jeremiah 1:5. The New Testament quotes Jesus comparing people's reaction to his message to their reaction to the message delivered by Moses (John 5:46). However, Luke, in Acts 7:37, tries to make a connection between Jesus and "the prophet like Moses" prophesied in Deuteronomy 18:15,18-19. A comparative study on the history of Moses, Jesus, and Muhammad will show that Muhammad was much more like Moses than Jesus was. From their birth to their political leadership, Muhammad resembles Moses much more than Jesus does.

Edip-Layth - End Note 7 (20:47)

Without repeating the divine instructions dictated to Moses, we are presented with Pharaoh's answer. The language and narrative of the Quran is deliberately left with gaps, so that the reader can actively participate in its comprehension through sound inferences and harmless imagination. Thus, not only is "unnecessary" repetition avoided, but the brain of the reader is stimulated. The Quran does not like a passive reader, and a lazy reader does not enjoy the Quran either. For other examples of scene overlaps, see 12:83; 26:16-18. 020:051-52 Modern polytheists and unappreciative people, when they do not have the intellectual courage to accept truth, in order to avoid acknowledging the truth, ask exactly the same question Pharaoh asked millennia ago. While delivering the monotheistic message of the Quran, while sharing the signs and miracles of the Quran, if you encounter similar excuses, you should use exactly the same answer given by Moses in verse 20:52. Verse 20:52 also rejects the distorted or mistranslated Biblical verse depicting God to be like a fallible human being regretting his mistakes or forgetting things (Genesis 6:6-7; Psalms 13:1; Lamentations 5:20). See 7:180.

Edip-Layth - End Note 8 (20:63)

Disinformation and misinformation is a common propaganda tool of all despots and corrupt leaders. 020:066 For the definition of magic, see 7:116 and 2:102.

Edip-Layth - End Note (20:66)

Edip-Layth - End Note 9 (20:83)

Aaron is criticized for being a passive bystander here. However, the Biblical version of the story puts Aaron in the rank of idolaters. See Old Testament, Exodus 32:2.

Edip-Layth - End Note 10 (20:96)

Ignoring common sense, the context of the verse, and the semantics of the Quran, traditional translations and commentaries create a bizarre story through the mistranslation of the words ATaR, and NaBaZa. To accommodate the mistranslation, they also add several non-existing and non-implied words, such as, "Muhammad," "Gabriel," "Dust," and "into calf." For a detailed discussion of this verse, see the Sample Comparisons section in the Introduction.

Edip-Layth - End Note 11 (20:109)

This verse rejects the "savior" role attributed to prophets and righteous people. 2:48; 19:87.

Edip-Layth - End Note 12 (20:113)

For another meaning of this verse, see 43:3.

Edip-Layth - End Note 13 (20:114)

A Quranic statement or phrase that we do not understand upon a first reading might become clear upon the second or later readings. To understand some verses, one might need to read the entire Quran and get its perspective. We might sometimes come to the understanding of a verse years later with an instantaneous inspiration. If we use the analogy of a radio, the Quran is like a radio station with a powerful and clear broadcast, and we are like a radio device receiving its message. The false doctrines and practices we inherit from the past and the environment might create static interference or background noise and prevent us from hearing the divine message more clearly. Besides, our tuning, the condition of the transistor, the power of our battery, and the direction of our antenna, all the factors that are affected by our attitude, prejudice, interest and knowledge level, might prevent us from hearing well, or understanding well. The radios that are made by "hadith and sunna" have defective designs, and the radios that automatically tune to the "hadith and sunna" station while also trying to tune to the Quran station, have too much noise; they all condemn themselves to receive the message with plenty of noise and interruptions (2:20;;).

Edip-Layth - End Note 14 (20:115)

See 2:36-39; 7:19-25; 20:115-123.

Edip-Layth - End Note 15 (20:133)

The truth-value of the Quran's message and its historical dimension provide evidence for its divine nature. The occurrence of the singular word bayyina (evidence/proof) in the Quran being exactly 19 times and the existence of the code 19 in previous scriptures is another fulfillment of this verse. See 46:10.

Muhammad Asad - The Message Of Quran

Muhammad Asad - End Note 1 (20:1)

According to some commentators, the letters t and h (pronounced ta ha) which introduce this surah belong to the group of al-mugatta'at-the "single [or "disjointed"] letters"-which are prefixed to a number of the Qur'anic surahs (see Appendix II). However, in the opinion of some of the Prophet's Companions (e.g. `Abd Allah ibn 'Abbas) and a number of outstanding personalities of the next generation (like Sa'id ibn Jubayr, Mujahid, Qatadah, Al-Hasan al-Basri, `Ikrimah, Ad-Dahhak, Al-Kalbi, etc.), ta ha is not just a combination of two single letters but a meaningful expression of its own, signifying "O man" (synonymous with ya rajul) in both the Nabataean and Syriac branches of the Arabic language (Tabari, Razi, Ibn Kathir), as well as in the-purely Arabian-dialect of the Yemenite tribe of `Akk, as is evident from certain fragments of their pre-Islamic poetry (quoted by Tabari and Zamakhshari). Tabari, in particular, gives his unqualified support to the rendering of ta ha as "O man".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 2 (20:2)

Le., the ethical discipline imposed upon man by the teachings of the Qur'an is not meant to narrow down his feel of life, but, on the contrary, to enhance it by deepening his consciousness of right and wrong.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 3 (20:5)

For my rendering of the metaphorical term al-arsh as "the throne of His almightiness", see note 43 on 7:54.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 4 (20:7)

I.e., He knows not only man's unspoken, conscious thoughts but also all that goes on within his subconscious self.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 5 (20:8)

For an explanation of this rendering of al-asma' al-husna, see surah 7, note 145.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 6 (20:9)

Apart from two short references to Moses in earlier surahs (53:36 and 87:19), the narrative appearing in verses 9-98 is undoubtedly the earliest Qur'anic exposition of the story of Moses as such. Its mention at this stage is connected with the reference to revelation at the beginning of this surah (verses 2-4) and, generally, with the Qur'anic doctrine of the basic ideological unity of all revealed religions.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 7 (20:10)

From the sequence (here as well as in 27:7 and 28:29) it appears that Moses had lost his way in the desert: probably a symbolic allusion to his dawning awareness that he was in need of spiritual guidance. This part of the story relates to the period of his wanderings subsequent to his flight from Egypt (see 28:14 ff.). Regarding the allegory of the "fire" -the "burning bush" of the Bible - see note 7 on 27:7-8.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 8 (20:11)

Lit., "he was called".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 9 (20:12)

Whereas some commentators assume that the word tuwan (or tuwa is the name of the "hallowed valley", Zamakhshari explains it, more convincingly, as meaning "twice" (from tuwan or Owan, "twice done") -i.e., "twice-hallowed"-apparently because God's voice was heard in it and because Moses was raised there to prophethood.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 10 (20:14)

Thus, conscious remembrance of God and of His oneness and uniqueness is declared to be the innermost purpose, as well as the intellectual justification. of all true prayer.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 11 (20:15)

I.e., the time of its coming.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 12 (20:15)

The expression "what he strove for" implies consciousness of endeavour. and thus excludes involuntary actions (in the widest sense of the latter term, comprising everything that is manifested in word or actual deed), as well as involuntary omissions, irrespective of whether the relevant action or omission is morally good or bad. By enunciating the above principle within the context of the story of Moses, the Qur'an stresses the essential identity of the ethical concepts underlying all true religions. (See also 53:39 and the corresponding note 32.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 13 (20:16)

Lit., "in it".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 14 (20:21)

The miraculous transformation of the staff into a serpent has, I believe, a mystic significance: it seems to be an allusion to the intrinsic difference between appearance and reality, and, consequently, to the spiritual insight into this difference bestowed by God on His chosen servants (cf. the experience of Moses with the unnamed sage described in 18:66-82). This interpretation finds strong support in 27:10 and 28:31, in both of which places it is said that Moses saw the staff "move rapidly, as if it were a serpent (ka'annah jann)"

Muhammad Asad - End Note 15 (20:22)

I.e., strangely luminescent by virtue of the prophethood to which he had been raised. (See also note 85 on 7:108.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 16 (20:24)

This seems to be a reference to Pharaoh's greatest sin, namely, his claim to divine status (cf. 28:38 and 79:24).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 17 (20:28)

Le., "remove all impediment from my speech" (cf. Exodus iv, 10, "I am slow of speech, and of a slow tongue"), which would imply that he was not gifted with natural eloquence.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 18 (20:29)

This is the primary meaning of the term wazir (lit., "burden-carrier", derived from wizr, "a burden"); hence its later-post-classical-application to government ministers.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 19 (20:34)

Lit., "much" or "abundantly".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 20 (20:37)

Lit., "at another time", i.e., the time of Moses' childhood and youth, which is recalled in verses 38-40. For a fuller explanation of the subsequent references to that period - the Pharaonic persecution of the children of Israel and the killing of their new-born males, the rescue of the infant Moses and his adoption by Pharaoh's family, his killing of the Egyptian, and his subsequent flight from Egypt see 28:3-21, where the story is narrated in greater detail.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 21 (20:39)

Lit., "take him" (cf. 28:9). Pharaoh is described as an enemy of God because of his overweening arrogance and cruelty as well as his claim to the status of divinity (see 79:24); and he was, unknowingly, an enemy of the infant Moses inasmuch as he hated and feared the people to whom the latter belonged.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 22 (20:39)

I.e., "under My protection and in accordance with the destiny which I have decreed for thee": possibly a reference to Moses' upbringing within the cultural environment of the royal palace and his subsequent acquisition of the ancient wisdom of Egypt-circumstances which were to qualify him for his future leadership and the special mission that God had in view for him.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 23 (20:40)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 28 (20:44)

Lit., "or [that he might] fear" -i.e., that there is some truth in the words of Moses. Since God knows the future, the tentative form in the above phrase-"so that he might (la'allahu) bethink himself", etc., - obviously does not imply any "doubt" on God's part as to Pharaoh's future reaction: it implies no more than His command to the bearer of His message to address the sinner with a view to the latter's bethinking himself: in other words, it relates to the intention or hope with which the message-bearer should approach his task (Razi). And since every Qur'anic narrative aims at bringing out an eternal truth or truths or at elucidating a universal principle of human behaviour, it is evident that God's command to Moses to speak to one particular sinner "in a mild manner, so that he might (have a chance to] bethink himself" retains its validity for all times and all such attempts at conversion.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 31 (20:50)

In the original, this sentence appears in the past tense ("has given" and "has guided"); but as it obviously relates to the continuous process of God's creation, it is independent of the concept of time and denotes, as in so many other places in the Qur'an. an unceasing present. The term khalq signifies in this context not merely the inner nature of a created thing or being but also the outward form in which this nature manifests itself; hence my composite rendering of khalqahu as "its true nature and form". The idea underlying the above sentence is expressed for the first time in 87:2-3, i.e., in a surah which belongs to the earliest period of Qur'anic revelation.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 32 (20:51)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 34 (20:52)

According to Razi, the dialogue between Moses and Pharaoh ends here for the time being, with verses 53-55 representing a direct Qur'anic discourse addressed to man in general.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 35 (20:53)

I.e., "has provided you with ways and means-both material and intellectual-to gain your livelihood on earth and from it".

Regarding the creation of man's body "out of the earth", see the second half of note 47 on 3:59, as well as note 24 on 15:26; its "return into it" signifies the dissolution of this body, after death, into the elementary organic and inorganic substances of which it was composed; and all these facts-creation, subsistence and dissolution-contain the message of God's almightiness, of the ephemeral nature of man's life on earth, and of his future resurrection.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 38 (20:56)

Lit., "We showed him" (araynahu), i.e., Pharaoh. According to Zamakhshari, Razi and Baydawi, this verb has here the meaning of "We made him acquainted with" or "aware of".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 39 (20:56)

The messages alluded to here are both those entrusted directly to Moses and the intangible "messages" forthcoming from God's creation and referred to in the preceding passage.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 49 (20:69)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 56 (20:73)

Pharaoh (a title borne by every indigenous ruler of Egypt) was considered to be a "god-king" and, thus, the embodiment of the Egyptian religion, in which occult practices and magic played a very important role; hence, every one of his subjects was duty-bound to accept magic as an integral part of the scheme of life.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 57 (20:73)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 58 (20:74)

I.e., he will neither be reborn spiritually nor find peace through extinction (Baghawi, Baydawi). As is apparent from the juxtaposition, in the next verse, of the term muirim (rendered by me as "one who is lost in sin") with that of mu'min ("believer"), the former term is here applied to one who, in his lifetime, has consciously and persistently denied God (Baydawi).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 59 (20:75)

Thus the Qur'an implies - here as well as in many other places - that the spiritual value of a person's faith depends on his doing righteous deeds as well: cf. the statement in 6:158 that on Judgment Day "believing will be of no avail to any human being ... who, while believing, did no good works".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 60 (20:77)

I.e., after all the trials which the Israelites had to undergo in Egypt, and after the plagues with which Pharaoh and his followers were afflicted (cf. 7:130 ff.).

See note 38 on 19:52. As regards God's "covenant" with the children of Israel, see 2:63 and 83.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 64 (20:81)

The reference to God's bestowal of "manna (mann) and quails (salwa)" upon the Israelites during their wanderings in the Sinai Desert after their exodus from Egypt is found in the Qur'an in two other places as well (namely, in 2:57 and 7:160). According to Arab philologists, the term mann denotes not only the sweet, resinous substance exuded by certain plants of the desert, but also everything that is "bestowed as a favour", i.e., without any effort on the part of the recipient. Similarly, the term salwa signifies not merely "a quail" or "quails", but also "all that makes man content and happy after privation" (Qamus). Hence the combination of these two terms denotes, metonymically, the gift of sustenance freely bestowed by God upon the followers of Moses.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 65 (20:81)

Or: "do not behave in an overweening manner" - i.e., "do not attribute these favours to your own supposed excellence on account of your descent from Abraham".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 66 (20:81)

There is almost complete unanimity among the classical commentators in that God's "condemnation" (ghadab, lit., "wrath") is a metonym for the inescapable retribution which man brings upon himself if he deliberately rejects God's guidance and "transgresses the bounds of equity".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 67 (20:83)

This passage relates to the time of Moses' ascent of Mount Sinai, mentioned in 2:51 and 7:142.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 68 (20:83)

Lit., "what has hastened thee ahead of thy people?" - implying that he should not have left them alone, without his personal guidance, at so early a stage in their freedom. In this inimitable elliptic manner the Qur'an alludes to the psychological fact that a community which attains to political and social freedom after centuries of bondage remains for a long time subject to the demoralizing influences of its past, and cannot all at once develop a spiritual and social discipline of its own.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 69 (20:84)

The classical commentators understand this phrase in its physical sense, i.e.. "they are coming up behind me and are now close by". Since, however. Moses was obviously meant to be alone on his ascent of Mount Sinai, I am of the opinion that his answer has a tropical sense, expressing his assumption that the children of Israel would follow his guidance even in his absence: an assumption which proved erroneous, as shown in the sequence.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 70 (20:85)

The designation as-samiri is undoubtedly an adjectival noun denoting the person's descent or origin. According to one of the explanations advanced by Tabari and Zamakhshari, it signifies "a man of the Jewish clan of the Samirah", i.e., the ethnic and religious group designated in later times as the Samaritans (a small remnant of whom is still living in Nablus, in Palestine). Since that sect as such did not yet exist at the time of Moses, it is possible that-as Ibn `Abbas maintained (Razi) -the person in question was one of the many Egyptians who had been converted to the faith of Moses and joined the Israelites on their exodus from Egypt (cf. note 92 on 7:124): in which case the designation samiri might be connected with the ancient Egyptian shemer, "a foreigner" or "stranger". This surmise is strengthened by his introduction of the worship of the golden calf, undoubtedly an echo of the Egyptian cult of Apis (see note 113 on 7:148). In any case, it is not impossible that the latter-day Samaritans descended -or were reputed to descend - from this personality, whether of Hebrew or of Egyptian origin; this might partly explain the persistent antagonism between them and the rest of the Israelite community.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 71 (20:86)

Or, according to Zamakhshari: "Did, then, the time [of my absence] seem too long to you?" (It is to be noted that the term `ahd signifies a "time" or "period" as well as a "covenant" or "promise".)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 72 (20:86)

Lit., "Or have you decided that condemnation by your -Sustainer should fall due upon you ? , "are you determined to disregard the consequences of your doings?"

Muhammad Asad - End Note 73 (20:87)

It is mentioned in Exodus xii, 35 that, immediately before their departure from Egypt, the Israelites "borrowed of the Egyptians jewels of silver and jewels of gold". This "borrowing" was obviously done under false pretences, without any intention on the part of the Israelites to return the jewellery to its rightful owners: for, according to the Biblical statement (ibid., verse 36), "they spoiled [i.e., robbed] the Egyptians" by doing so. While it is noteworthy that the Old Testament, in its present, corrupted form, does not condemn this behaviour. its iniquity seems to have gradually dawned upon the Israelites, and so they decided to get rid of those sinfully acquired ornaments (Baghawi, Zamakhshari and - in one of his alternative interpretations - Razi).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 74 (20:88)

This interpolation is necessary in view of the change from the direct speech in the preceding verse to the indirect in this one and in the sequence.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 75 (20:88)

See surah 7, note 113.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 77 (20:90)

Sc., "and do not follow the Samaritan". This is in sharp contrast to the Bible (Exodus xxxii, 1-5), which declares Aaron guilty of making and worshipping the golden calf.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 78 (20:93)

Cf. the last sentence of 7:142, where Moses, before leaving for Mount Sinai, exhorts Aaron to "act righteously" (islih). In this connection see also Aaron's reply to Moses in 7:150, as well as the corresponding note 117.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 79 (20:94)

See 7:150.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 80 (20:94)

Lit., "to my word" or "to what I had said"-evidently, about the importance of keeping the people united (Zamakhshari).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 81 (20:96)

It is to be noted that the verb basura (lit., "he became seeing") has the tropical significance of "he perceived [something] mentally", or "he gained insight" or "he understood". Hence, Abu Muslim al-Isfahani (whose interpretation of the whole of this verse Razi analyzes and finds most convincing) explains the above phrase as meaning, "I realized what they [i.e., the rest of the people] did not realize-namely, that some of thy beliefs, O Moses, were wrong". It would seem that the Samaritan objected to the idea of a transcendental, imperceivable God, and thought that the people ought to have something more "tangible" to believe in. (See also next note.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 82 (20:96)

Contrary to the fanciful interpretations advanced by some of the other commentators, Abu Muslim (as quoted by Razi) explains the term athar (lit., "vestige" or "trace") in its tropical sense of the "practices and sayings" or - collectively - the "teachings" of any person, and particularly of a prophet; thus, he makes it clear that the phrase gabadtu gabdatan min athari 'r-rasul fa-nabadhtuha signifies "I took hold of a handful [i.e., "something"] of the teachings of the Apostle, and discarded it": it being understood that "the Apostle" referred to by the Samaritan in the third person is Moses himself. (As already mentioned in the preceding note, Razi unreservedly subscribes to Abu Muslim's interpretation of this passage.) In my opinion, the Samaritan's rejection of a part of Moses' teachings is meant to explain the subconscious tendency underlying all forms of idolatry and of the attribution of divine qualities to things or beings other than God: a futile, self-deceiving hope of bringing the Unperceivable closer to one's limited perception by creating a tangible "image" of the Divine Being or, at least, of something that could be conceived as His "emanation". Inasmuch as all such endeavours obscure rather than illuminate man's understanding of God, they defeat their own purpose and destroy the misguided devotee's spiritual potential: and this is undoubtedly the purport of the story of the golden calf as given in the Qur'an.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 83 (20:97)

Lit., "no touching" -a metaphorical description of the loneliness and the social ostracism in which he would henceforth find himself.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 84 (20:97)

Lit., "there is for thee an appointment which thou canst not fail to keep".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 85 (20:99)

The adverb kadhalika ("thus") which introduces this verse is meant to stress the purpose of all Qur'anic references to past events-be they historical or legendary-as well as the manner in which the relevant stories are treated. Since the purpose underlying every Qur'anic narrative is, invariably, the illustration of certain fundamental truths, the narrative as such is often condensed and elliptic, omitting all that has no direct bearing on the point or points which the Qur'an means to bring out. The term "reminder" alludes to the unceasing guidance which God offers to man through His revelations.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 86 (20:102)

Lit., "blue [of eye]"-i.e., as if their eyes were covered with a bluish, opaque film.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 87 (20:103)

As in several other places in the Qur'an (e.g., in 2:259, 17:52, 18:19, 23:112-113, 30:55, 79:46, etc.), this and the next verse touch upon the illusory character of man's consciousness of "time" and, thus, upon the relativity of the concept of "time" as such. The number "ten" is often used in Arabic to denote "a few" (Razi).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 88 (20:104)

Signifying, in this context, "We alone understand fully".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 89 (20:106)

Lit., "leave it"-the pronoun relating, by implication, to the earth (Zamakhshari and Razi).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 90 (20:107)

In the eschatology of the Qur'an, the "end of the world" does not signify an annihilation i.e., reduction to nothingness-of the physical universe but, rather, its fundamental, cataclysmic transformation into something that men cannot now visualize. This is brought out in many allegorical allusions to the Last Day, e.g., in 14:48, which speaks of "the Day when the earth shall be changed into another earth, as shall be the heavens".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 91 (20:108)

Lit., "the caller in whom there will be no deviation (la `iwaja lahu)"-i.e., the summons to the Last Judgment.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 92 (20:109)

Regarding the Qur'anic concept of "intercession" on the Day of Judgment, see note 7 on 10:3. The "word [of faith]" referred to towards the end of the above verse is-according to Ibn `Abbas (as quoted by Baghawi) - a metonym for the belief that "there is no deity save God", i.e., the realization of His oneness and uniqueness. See also 19:87 and the corresponding note 74.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 93 (20:110)

For an explanation of this phrase -which occurs in exactly the same wording in 2:255, 21:28 and 22:76 as well - see surah 2, note. 247.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 94 (20:111)

I.e., evildoing which has not been atoned for by repentance before death (Razi). In this particular context, it may be an allusion to the rejection of God's guidance - His "reminder" - spoken of in verses 99-101.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 95 (20:112)

Lit., "no fear of [any] wrong"-i.e., punishment for any sin which he may have contemplated but not committed - "and neither of a diminution", i.e., of his merit: .cf. the twice-repeated statement in 16:96-97 that the righteous shall be recompensed in the hereafter "in accordance with the best that they ever did".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 96 (20:113)

As in verse 99 above - with which this passage connects - the adverb kadhalika ("thus") refers to the method and purpose of the Qur'an.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 97 (20:113)

Lit., "as an Arabic discourse (Qur'an)". See, in particular, 12:2, 13:37, 14:4 and 19:97, as well as the corresponding notes.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 98 (20:113)

Lit., "so that they might be [or "remain"] God-conscious, or that it create for them a remembrance", i.e., of God. The verb ahdatha signifies "he brought (something) into existence", i.e., newly or for the first time, while the noun dhikr denotes "remembrance" as well as the "presence [of something] in the mind" (Raghib), i.e., awareness.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 99 (20:114)

Whenever the noun al-hagq is used as a designation of God, it signifies "the Truth" in the absolute, intrinsic sense, eternally and immutably existing beyond the ephemeral, changing phenomena of His creation: hence, "the Ultimate Truth". God's attribute of al-malik, on the other hand, denotes His absolute sway over all that exists and can, therefore, be suitably rendered as "the Ultimate Sovereign".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 100 (20:114)

Lit., "be not hasty with the Qur'an" (see next note).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 101 (20:114)

Although it is very probable that - as most of the classical commentators point out - this exhortation was in the first instance addressed to the Prophet Muhammad, there is no doubt that it applies to every person, at all times, who reads the Qur'an. The idea underlying the above verse may be summed up thus: Since the Qur'an is the Word of God, all its component parts-phrases, sentences, verses and surah - form one integral, coordinated whole (cf. the last sentence of 25:32 and the corresponding note 27). Hence, if one is really intent on understanding the Qur'anic message, one must beware of a "hasty approach"-that is to say, of drawing hasty conclusions from isolated verses or sentences taken out of their context-but should, rather, allow the whole of the Qur'an to be revealed to one's mind before attempting to interpret single aspects of its message. (See also 75:16-19 and the corresponding notes.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 102 (20:115)

The relevant divine commandment-or, rather, warning-is spelled out in verse 117. The present passage connects with the statement in verse 99, "Thus do We relate unto thee some of the stories of what happened in the past", and is meant to show that negligence of spiritual truths is one of the recurrent characteristics of the human race (Razi), which is symbolized here-as in many other places in the Qur'an-by Adam.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 103 (20:116)

See 2:30-34 and the corresponding notes, especially 23, 25 and 26, as well as note 31 on 15:41. Since-as I have shown in those notes-the faculty of conceptual thinking is man's outstanding endowment, his "forgetting" God's commandment-resulting from a lack of all "firmness of purpose" in the domain of ethics-is an evidence of the moral weakness characteristic of the human race (cf. 4:28 - "man has been created weak"): and this, in its turn, explains man's dependence on unceasing divine guidance, as pointed out in verse 113 above.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 104 (20:117)

Lit., "so that thou wilt become unhappy". Regarding the significance of "the garden" spoken of here, see surah 2, note 27.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 105 (20:118)

Lit., "be naked": but in view of the statement in verse 121 (as well as in 7:22) to the effect that only after their fall from grace did Adam and Eve become "conscious of their nakedness", it is but logical to assume that the words "that thou shalt not ... be naked" have a spiritual significance, implying that man, in his original state of innocence, would not feel naked despite all absence of clothing. (For the deeper implications of this allegory, see note 14 on 7:20.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 106 (20:120)

This symbolic tree is designated in the Bible as "the tree of life" and "the tree of knowledge of good and evil" (Genesis ii, 9), while in the above Qur'anic account Satan speaks of it as "the tree of life eternal (al-khuld)". Seeing that Adam and Eve did not achieve immortality despite their tasting the forbidden fruit, it is obvious that Satan's suggestion was, as it always is, deceptive. On the other hand, the Qur'an tells us nothing about the real nature of that "tree" beyond pointing out that it was Satan who described it- falsely - as "the tree of immortality": and so we may assume that the forbidden tree is simply an allegory of the limits which the Creator has set to man's desires and actions: limits beyond which he may not go without offending against his own, God-willed nature. Man's desire for immortality on earth implies a wishful denial of death and resurrection, and thus of the ultimate reality of what the Qur'an describes as "the hereafter" or "the life to come" (al-akhirah). This desire is intimately connected with Satan's insinuation that it is within man's reach to become the master of "a kingdom that will never decay": in other words, to become "free" of all limitations and thus, in the last resort, of the very concept of God-the only concept which endows human life with real meaning and purpose.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 107 (20:121)

Regarding the symbolism of Adam and Eve's becoming "conscious of their nakedness", see note 105 above as well as the reference, in 7:26-27, to "the garment of God-consciousness", the loss of which made man's ancestors "aware of their nakedness", i.e., of their utter helplessness and, hence, their dependence on God.

Lit., "Is it, then, no guidance for them how many a generation. . .", etc. It is to be borne in mind that, in Qur'anic usage, the noun qarn signifies not only "a generation", but also - and rather more often - "people belonging to one particular epoch", i.e., "a civilization" in the historical sense of this term.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 112 (20:129)

Lit., "and a term set [by Him]". This phrase, placed in the original at the end of the sentence, connects - as most of the classical commentators point out - with the opening clause of this verse, and has been rendered accordingly.

According to most of the commentators, this relates to the deniers of the truth spoken of in the preceding passages; but since the above injunction has obviously a wider purport, condemning envy in general, I have rendered this expression as "so many others".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 116 (20:131)

Implying that whatever God grants a person is an outcome of divine wisdom and, therefore, truly appropriate to the destiny which God has decreed for that person. Alternatively, the phrase may be understood as referring to the life to come and the spiritual sustenance which God bestows upon the righteous.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 117 (20:132)

My interpolation of the words "for Us" is based on Razi's interpretation of the above sentence: "God makes it clear that He has enjoined this [i.e., prayer] upon men for their own benefit alone, inasmuch as He Himself is sublimely exalted above any [need of] benefits." In other words, prayer must not be conceived as a kind of tribute to a "jealous God"-as the Old Testament, in its present corrupted form, frequently describes Him-but solely as a spiritual benefit for the person who prays.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 118 (20:132)

Lit., "to God-consciousness".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 120 (20:133)

I.e., "Does not the Qur'an express the same fundamental truths as were expressed in the revelations granted to the earlier prophets?" Beyond this, the above rhetorical question contains an allusion to the predictions of the advent of Muhammad to be found in the earlier scriptures, e.g.. in Deuteronomy xviii, 15 and 18 (discussed in my note 33 on 2:42) or in John xiv, 16, xv, 26 and xvi, 7, where Jesus speaks of the "Comforter" who is to come after him. (Regarding this latter prediction, see my note on 61:6.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 121 (20:134)

Cf. 6:131, 15:4 or 6:208-209, where it is stressed that God never punishes man for any wrong committed in ignorance of what constitutes right and wrong in the moral sense - i.e., before making it possible for him to avail himself of divine guidance.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 122 (20:135)

I.e., human nature is such that no man, whatever his persuasion or condition, can ever cease to hope that the way of life chosen by him will prove to have been the right way.

As-Saamiri was not a Sumerian. He originally hailed from northern India. Babu Rajindra's treatise "Casting of a Caste" shows Saamiri belonging to the 'Untouchables'. Fed up with apartheid, he tried to lay down the foundation of a new mixed caste that could socialize with all four castes of Hinduism. Consequently, he was exiled by the powerful Brahmins and ended up in Egypt and later followed Moses in the Exodus. Cow worship was running in his blood stream. Side by side, the golden calf of the Israelites symbolized the centuries old Egyptian influence. The Egyptians used to worship the 'sacred' bull APIS who was considered to be a god-incarnate. The soul of the sacred bull upon death was supposed to transmigrate into another idol called Osiris whom they worshiped as God's son. Recall Uzayr mentioned in the Qur'an (9:30). Some Jews in Arabia, still under the influence of ancient Egyptian traditions during the times of the exalted messenger, used to believe in Uzayr or Osiris the Bull-god as God's son

The Monotheist Group	21:78 And David and Solomon, when they gave judgment in the case of the crop that was damaged by the sheep of the people, and We were witness to their judgment.
Muhammad Asad	21:78 AND [remember] David and Solomon - [how it was] when both of them gave judgment concerning the field into which some people's sheep had strayed by night and pastured therein, and [how] We bore witness to their judgment: ⁷⁰
	David and Solomon

Rashad Khalifa	21:78 And David and Solomon, when they once ruled with regard to someone's crop that was destroyed by another's sheep, we witnessed their judgment.
Shabbir Ahmed	21:78 And David and Solomon ruled in great justice. They gathered the straying sheep, the masses of their kingdom, when they were bent upon destroying their own crop of prosperity. We were Witness to their benevolent governance.

The Monotheist Group	21:79 So We gave Solomon the correct understanding, and both of them We have given wisdom and knowledge. And We committed the mountains with David to praise as well as the birds. This is what We did.
Muhammad Asad	21:79 for, [though] We made Solomon understand the case [more profoundly] yet We vouchsafed unto both of them sound judgment and knowledge [of right and wrong]. ⁷¹ And We caused ⁷² the mountains to join David in extolling Our limitless glory, and likewise the birds: ⁷³ for We are able to do [all things].
Rashad Khalifa	21:79 We granted Solomon the correct understanding, though we endowed both of them with wisdom and knowledge. We committed the mountains to serve David in glorifying (God), as well as the birds. This is what we did.
Shabbir Ahmed	21:79 We gave Solomon great understanding of the affairs of the state, and each of them We endowed with wisdom and knowledge. It was Our Power that made the tribal leaders (loyal to David so that they could) strive to manifest Our glory as did the horse riders of the strong Tribe of At-Taeer. Muhammad Asad - The Message Of Quran

Lit., "and yet in [their] heedlessness they are obstinate (mu'ridun)".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 2 (21:2)

Lit., "while they are playing".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 3 (21:3)

See next note.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 4 (21:3)

As regards my occasional rendering of sihr (lit., "sorcery" or "magic") as "spellbinding eloquence", see 74:24, where this term occurs for the first time in the chronology of Quranic revelation. By rejecting the message of the Qur'an on the specious plea that Muhammad is but a human being endowed with "spellbinding eloquence", the opponents of the Quranic doctrine in reality "conceal their innermost thoughts": for, their rejection is due not so much to any pertinent criticism of this doctrine as, rather, to their instinctive, deep-set unwillingness to submit to the moral and spiritual discipline which an acceptance of the Prophet's call would entail.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 5 (21:4)

According to the earliest scholars of Medina and Basrah, as well as some of the scholars of Kufah, this word is spelt qul, as an imperative ("Say"), whereas some of the Meccan scholars and the majority of those of Kufah read it as qala ("He [i.e., the Prophet] said"). In the earliest copies of the Qur'an the spelling was apparently confined, in this instance, to the consonants q-l: hence the possibility of reading it either as qul or as qala. However, as Tabari points out, both these readings have the same meaning and are, therefore, equally valid, "for, when God bade Muham mad to say this, he [undoubtedly] said it Hence, in whichever way this word is read, the reader is correct (musib as-sawab) in his reading." Among the classical commentators, Baghawi and Baydawi explicitly use the spelling qul, while Zamakhshari's short remark that "it has also been read as qala" seems to indicate his own preference for the imperative qul.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 6 (21:5)

Lit., "confusing medleys (adghath) of dreams".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 7 (21:6)

Lit., "before them".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 8 (21:6)

The downfall of those communities of old - frequently referred to in the Qur'an - was invariably due to the fact that they had been resolved to ignore all spiritual truths which militated against their own, materialistic concept of life: is it, then (so the Quranic argument goes), reasonable to expect that the opponents of the Prophet Muhammad, who are similarly motivated, would be more willing to consider his message on its merits?

Muhammad Asad - End Note 9 (21:7)

Lit., "followers of the reminder" - i.e., of the Bible, which in its original, uncorrupted form represented one of Gods "reminders" to man.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 10 (21:8)

Lit., "neither did We fashion them [i.e., those apostles] as bodies that ate no food", implying a denial of any supernatural quality in the prophets entrusted with God's message (cf. 5:75, 13:38 and 25:20, as well as the corresponding notes). The above is an answer to the unbelievers' objection to Muhammad's prophethood expressed in verse 3 of this surah.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 11 (21:9)

I.e., their believing followers.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 12 (21:9)

As regards my rendering of al-musrifun as "those who had wasted their own selves", see note 21 on the last sentence of 10:12.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 13 (21:10)

The term dhikr, which primarily denotes a "reminder" or a "remembrance", or, as Raghīb defines it, the "presence (of something) in the mind", has also the meaning of "that by which one is remembered, i.e., with praise - in other words, "renown" or "fame" - and, tropically, "honour", "eminence" or "dignity". Hence, the above phrase contains, apart from the concept of a "reminder", an indirect allusion to the dignity and happiness to which man may attain by following the spiritual and social precepts laid down in the Qur'an. By rendering the expression dhikrukum as "all that you ought to bear in mind", I have tried to bring out all these meanings.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 14 (21:11)

Lit., "after it".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 16 (21:13)

The Qur'an does not say whose words these are, but the tenor of this passage indicates, I believe, that it is the scornful, self-accusing voice of the sinners' own conscience: hence my interpolation, between brackets, at the beginning of this verse.

Muhammad Asad - End Note (21:13)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 17 (21:14)

Lit., "They said".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 18 (21:16)

Lit., "playing" or "playfully", i.e., without meaning and purpose: see note 11 on 10:5

Muhammad Asad - End Note 19 (21:17)

Lit., "if We had [ever] willed to do so": meaning that, had God ever willed to "indulge in a pastime" (which, being almighty and self-sufficient, He has no need to do). He could have found it within His Own Self, without any necessity to create a universe which would embody His hypothetical - and logically inconceivable - will to "please Himself", and would thus represent a "projection", as it were, of His Own Being. In the elliptic manner of the Qur'an, the above passage amounts to a statement of God's transcendence.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 20 (21:18)

I.e., the truth of God's transcendence against the false idea of His existential immanence in or co-existence with, the created universe.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 21 (21:18)

The obvious fact that everything in the created universe is finite and perishable effectively refutes the claim that it could be a "projection" of the Creator, who is infinite and eternal.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 22 (21:18)

Lit., "for all that you attribute [to God] by way of description" or "of definition" (cf. the last sentence of 6:100 and the corresponding note 88) - implying that the idea of God's "immanence" in His creation is equivalent to an attempt to define His Being.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 23 (21:19)

According to the classical commentators, this refers to the angels; but it is possible to understand the expression "those who are with Him" in a wider sense, comprising not only the angels but also all human beings who are truly God-conscious and wholly dedicated to Him. In either case, their "being with Him" is a metaphorical indication of their spiritual eminence and place of honour in God's sight, and does not bear any spatial connotation of "nearness" (Zamakhshari and Razi): obviously so, because God is limitless in space as well as in time. (See also 40:7 and the corresponding note 4.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 24 (21:21)

As stressed by Zamakhshari, the particle am which introduces this sentence has not, as is so often the case, an interrogative sense ("is it that"), but is used here in the sense of bal, which in this instance may be rendered as "and yet".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 25 (21:21)

Lit., "they have taken unto themselves deities from the earth", i.e., from among the things or beings found on earth: an expression which alludes to all manner of false objects of worship - idols of every description, forces of nature, deified human beings, and, finally, abstract concepts such as wealth, power. etc.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 26 (21:22)

Lit., "in those two [realms]", alluding to the first clause of verse 19 above.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 27 (21:22)

Lit., "the Sustainer (rabb) of the awesome throne of almightiness". (For this rendering of al-arsh, see note 43 on 7:54).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 28 (21:22)

Cf. last sentence of verse 18 above and the corresponding note 22, as well as note 88 on 6:100.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 29 (21:24)

See note 24 above.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 30 (21:24)

Lit., "produce your evidence", i.e., for the existence of deities other than God, as well as for the intellectual and moral justification of worshipping anything but Him.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 31 (21:24)

I.e., the earlier prophets, the purport of whose messages was always the stress on the oneness of God.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 32 (21:24)

In other words, most people's obstinate refusal to consider a reasonable proposition on its merits is often due to no more than the simple fact that it is not familiar to them.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 33 (21:26)

I.e., utterly remote from the imperfection implied in the concept of 'offspring': see note 77 on 19:92.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 34 (21:26)

This alludes to prophets like Jesus, whom the Christians regard as "the son of God", as well as to the angels, whom the pre-Islamic Arabs considered to be "God's daughters" (since they were conceived of as females

Muhammad Asad - End Note 36 (21:28)

See note 247 on 2:255.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 37 (21:28)

Cf. 19:87 and 20:109. Regarding the problem of intercession" as such, see note 7 on 10:3.

Muhammad Asad - End Note (21:28)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 38 (21:30)

It is, as a rule, futile to make an explanation of the Qur'an dependent on "scientific findings" which may appear true today, but may equal well be disproved tomorrow by new findings. Nevertheless, The above unmistakable reference to the unitary origin of the universe - metonymically described in the Qur'an as "the heavens and the earth" - strikingly anticipates the view of almost all modern astrophysicists that this universe has originated from one entity, which became subsequently consolidated through gravity and then separated into individual nebulae, galaxies and solar systems, with further individual parts progressively breaking away to form new entities in the shape of stars, planets etc. (Regarding the Quranic reference to the phenomenon described by the term "expanding universe", see 51:47 and the corresponding note 31.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 39 (21:30)

The statement that God "made out of water every living thing" expresses most concisely a truth that is nowadays universally accepted by science. It has a threefold meaning: (1) Water was the environment within which the prototype of all living matter originated; (2) among all the innumerable - existing or conceivable - liquids, only water has the peculiar properties necessary for the emergence and development of life; and (3) the protoplasm, which is the physical basis of every living cell - whether in plants or in animals - and represents the only form of matter in which the phenomena of life are manifested, consists overwhelmingly of water and is, thus, utterly dependent on it. Read together with the preceding statement, which alludes to the unitary origin of the physical universe, the emergence of life from and within an equally unitary element points to the existence of a unitary plan underlying all creation and, hence, to the existence and oneness of the Creator. This accent on the oneness of God and the unity of this creation is taken up again in verse 92 below.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 40 (21:31)

See 16:15 and the corresponding note 11.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 41 (21:32)

See note 4 on the first sentence of 13:2, which seems to have a similar meaning.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 42 (21:34)

This relates to the objection of the unbelievers, mentioned in verse 3 of this surah, that Muhammad is "but a mortal like yourselves", and connects also with verses 7-8, which stress that all of God's apostles were but mortal men (cf. 3:144).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 43 (21:34)

The obvious implication "and so We shall not grant it unto thee, either". Cf. 39:30 - "thou art bound to die".

Muhammad Asad - End Note (21:34)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 44 (21:35)

Lit., "but if, then, thou shouldst die, will they live forever?" - implying an assumption on their part that they would not be called to account on death and resurrection.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 46 (21:36)

Lit., "see thee": but since this verb has here obviously an abstract meaning, relating to the message propounded by the Prophet., it is best rendered as above.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 47 (21:36)

Sc., "and dares to deny their reality although he is a mere mortal like ourselves?"

Muhammad Asad - End Note 48 (21:36)

I.e., although they resent any aspersion cast on whatever things or forces they unthinkingly worship, they refuse to acknowledge God's planning will manifested in every aspect of His creation.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 49 (21:37)

Lit., "is created out of haste" - i.e., he is by nature imbued with impatience: cf. last sentence of 17:11. In the present context this refers to man's impatience regarding things to come: in this case - as is obvious from the sequence - his hasty refusal to believe in God's coming judgment.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 50 (21:37)

Cf. 16:1 - "God's judgment is [bound to] come: do not, then, call for its speedy advent!"

Muhammad Asad - End Note 51 (21:38)

The Quranic answer to this question is given in 7:187.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 52 (21:41)

See 6:10 (which has exactly the same wording) and the corresponding note 9.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 53 (21:42)

The reference to God, in this context, as "the Most Gracious" (ar-rahman) is meant to bring out the fact that He - and He alone - is the protector of all creation.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 54 (21:44)

Lit., "until their lives (umur) grew long" - i.e., until they grew accustomed to the thought that their prosperity would last forever (Zamakhshari).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 55 (21:44)

For an explanation. See the identical phrase in 13:41 and the corresponding notes 79 and 80.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 56 (21:45)

Lit., "whenever they are warned".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 57 (21:48)

See note 38 on 2:53. The reference to the revelation bestowed on the earlier prophets as "the standard by which to discern the true from the false" (al-furqan) has here a twofold implication: firstly, it alludes to the Quranic doctrine - explained in note 5 on 2:4 - of the historical continuity in all divine revelation, and, secondly, it stresses the fact that revelation - and revelation alone - provides an absolute criterion of all moral valuation. Since the Mosaic dispensation as such was binding on the children of Israel alone and remained valid only within a particular historical and cultural context, the term al-furqan relates here not to the Mosaic Law as such, but to the fundamental ethical truths contained in the Torah and common to all divine revelations.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 58 (21:49)

For an explanation of the above rendering of the expression bi l-ghayb, see note 3 on 2:3.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 59 (21:51)

The possessive pronoun "his" affixed to the noun rushd (which, in this context, has the meaning of "consciousness of what is right") emphasizes the highly personal, intellectual quality of Abraham's progressive realization of God's almightiness and uniqueness (cf. 6:74-79 as well as note 69 on 6:83); while the expression min qabl - rendered by me as "long before [the time of Moses]" - stresses, once again, the element of continuity in man's religious insight and experience.

Muhammad Asad - End Note (21:58)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 61 (21:64)

Lit., "they turned to [or "upon"] themselves", i.e., blaming one another.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 62 (21:64)

I.e., "you are doing wrong to Abraham by rashly suspecting him" (Tabari).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 63 (21:65)

Lit., "they were turned upside down upon their heads": an idiomatic phrase denoting a "mental somersault" - In this case, a sudden reversal of their readiness to exonerate Abraham and a return to their former suspicion.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 64 (21:69)

Nowhere does the Qur'an state that Abraham was actually, bodily thrown into the fire and miraculously kept alive in it: on the contrary, the phrase "God saved him from the fire" occurring in 29:24 points, rather, to the fact of his not having been thrown into it. On the other hand, the many elaborate (and conflicting) stories with which the classical commentators have embroidered their interpretation of the above verse can invariably be traced back to Talmudic legends and may, therefore, be disregarded. What the Qur'an gives us here, as well as in 29:24 and 37:97, is apparently an allegorical allusion to the fire of persecution, which Abraham had to suffer, and which, by dint of its intensity, was to become in his later life a source of spiritual strength and inner peace (salam). Regarding the deeper implications of the term salam, see note 29 on 5:16.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 65 (21:70)

Inasmuch as Abraham forsook - as shown in the next verse - his homeland, and thus abandoned his people to their spiritual ignorance.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 66 (21:71)

Lit., "for all the worlds" or "for all people": i.e., Palestine, which subsequently became the homeland of a long line of prophets. (Abraham's native place - and the scene of his early struggles against polytheism - was Ur in Mesopotamia.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 67 (21:72)

I.e., in addition (nafilatan) to his eldest son Ishmael (Isma'il) who had been born years before Isaac.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 68 (21:74)

For the story of Lot, see 7:80-84, 11:77-83 and 15:58-76.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 69 (21:76)

I.e., the Deluge. The story of Noah is mentioned several times in the Qur'an and particularly in 11:25-48. Regarding the Deluge itself, see surah 7 note 47.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 70 (21:78)

For an elucidation of the story - or, rather, legend - to which the above verse alludes, we must rely exclusively on the Companions of the Prophet, since neither the Qur'an nor any authentic saying of the Prophet spells it out to us. However, the fact that a good many Companions and their immediate successors (tabi'un) fully agreed on the substance of the story, differing only in one or two insignificant details, seems to indicate that at that period it was already well-established in ancient Arabian tradition. (cf note 77 below) According to this story, a flock of sheep strayed at night into a neighbouring field and destroyed its crop. The case was brought before King David for judicial decision. On finding that the incident was due to the negligence of the owner of the sheep, David awarded the whole flock - the value of which corresponded roughly to the extent of the damage - as an indemnity to the owner of the field. David's young son, Solomon, regarded this judgment as too severe, inasmuch as the sheep represented the defendant's capital, whereas the damage was of a transitory nature, involving no more than the loss of one year's crop, i.e., of income. He therefore suggested to his father that the judgment should be altered: the owner of the field should have the temporary possession and usufruct of the sheep (milk, wool, newborn lambs, etc.), while their owner should tend the damaged field until it was restored to its former productivity, whereupon both the field and the flock of sheep should revert to their erstwhile owners; in this way the plaintiff would be fully compensated for his loss without depriving the defendant of his substance. David realized that his son's solution of the case was better than his own, and passed judgment accordingly; but since he, no less than Solomon, had been inspired by a deep sense of justice, God - in the words of the Qur'an "bore witness to their judgment".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 71 (21:79)

I.e., the fact that Solomon's judgment was more profound did not disprove the intrinsic justice of David's original judgment or deprive it of its merit.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 72 (21:79)

Lit., "We compelled".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 73 (21:79)

A reference to the Psalms of David, which call upon all nature to extol the glory of God - similar to the Quranic verses, "The seven heavens extol His limitless glory, and the earth, and all that they contain" (17:44), or "All that is in the heavens and on earth extols God's limitless glory" (57:1).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 74 (21:80)

The noun labus is synonymous with libas or libs, signifying "a garment" or "garments" (Qamus, Lisan al -Arab). But since this term has occasionally been used by pre-Islamic Arabs in the sense of "mail" or "coats of mail" (ibid.), the classical commentators assume that it has this meaning in the above context as well; and in this they rely on the - otherwise unsupported - statement of the tabi'i Qatadah to the effect that "David was the first to make chain mail" (Tabari). Accordingly, they understand the term bas which occurs at the end of the sentence in its secondary sense of "war" or "warlike violence", and interpret the relevant part of the verse thus: 'We taught him how to make coats of mail for you, so that they might fortify you against your [mutual acts of] violence', or "against [the effects of] your warlike violence". One should, however, bear in mind that bas signifies also "harm", "misfortune", "distress", etc., as well as "danger"; hence it denotes, in its widest sense, anything that causes distress or fear (Taj al-'Arus). If we adopt this last meaning, the term labus may be understood in its primary significance of "garment" - in, this case, the metaphorical "garment of God-consciousness" (libas at-taqwa) of which the Qur'an speaks in 7:26. Rendered in this sense, the above verse expresses the idea that the Almighty taught David how to imbue his followers with that deep God-consciousness which frees men from all spiritual distress and all fears, whether it be fear of one another or the subconscious fear of the Unknown. The concluding rhetorical question, "but are you grateful [for this boon]?" implies that, as a rule, man does not fully realize - and, hence, is not really grateful for - the spiritual bounty thus offered him by God.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 75 (21:81)

This is apparently an allusion to the fleets of sailing ships which brought untold riches to Palestine ("the land which We had blessed") and made Solomon's wealth proverbial.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 83 (21:82)

According to the Biblical account (which more or less agrees with the Quranic references to his story), Jonah was a prophet sent to the people of Nineveh, the capital of Assyria. At first his preaching was disregarded by his people, and he left them in anger, thus abandoning the mission entrusted to him by God; in the words of the Qur'an (37:140), "he fled like a runaway slave". The allegory of his temporary punishment and his subsequent rescue and redemption is referred to elsewhere in the Qur'an (i.e., in 37:139-148) and explained in the corresponding notes. It is to that punishment, repentance and salvation that the present and the next verse allude. (The redemption of Jonah's people is mentioned in 10:98 and 37:47-148.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 77 (21:82)

In this as well as in several other passages relating to Solomon, the Qur'an alludes to the many poetic legends which were associated with his name since early antiquity and had become part and parcel of Judaeo-Christian and Arabian lore long before the advent of Islam. Although it is undoubtedly possible to interpret such passages in a "rationalistic" manner, I do not think that this is really necessary. Because they were so deeply ingrained in the imagination of the people to whom the Qur'an addressed itself in the first instance, these legendary accounts of Solomon's wisdom and magic powers had acquired a cultural reality of their own and were, therefore, eminently suited to serve as a medium for the parabolic exposition of certain ethical truths with which this book is concerned: and so, without denying or confirming their mythical character, the Qur'an uses them as a foil for the idea that God is the ultimate source of all human power and glory, and that all achievements of human ingenuity, even though they may sometimes border on the miraculous, are but an expression of His transcendental creativity.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 78 (21:83)

The story of Job (Ayyub in Arabic), describing his erstwhile happiness and prosperity, his subsequent trials and tribulations, the loss of all his children and his property, his own loathsome illness and utter despair and, finally, God's reward of his patience in adversity, is given in full in the Old Testament (The Book of Job). This Biblical, highly philosophical epic is most probably a Hebrew translation or paraphrase - still evident in the language employed - of an ancient Nabataean (i.e., North-Arabian) poem, for "Job, the author of the finest piece of poetry that the ancient Semitic world produced, was an Arab, not a Jew, as the form of his name (Iyyob) and the scene of his book, North Arabia, indicate" (Philip K. Hitti, History of the Arabs, London 1937, pp. 42-43). Since God "spoke" to him, Job ranks in the Qur'an among the prophets, personifying the supreme virtue of patience in adversity (sabr).

Lit., "and him of the pledge". The expression dhu l-kifl is derived from the verb kafala - and especially the form takaffala - which signifies "he became responsible [for some- thing or someone]" or "pledged himself [to do something]". Although the classical commentators consider dhu l-kifl to be the epithet or the proper name of a particular prophet - whom they variously, more or less at random, identify with Elijah or Joshua or Zachariah or Ezekiel - I fail to see any reason whatever for such attempts at "identification", the more so since we have not a single authentic hadith which would mention, or even distantly allude to, a prophet by this name. I am, therefore, of the opinion that we have here (as in the identical expression in 38: 48) a generic term applying to every one of the prophets, inasmuch as each of them pledged himself unreservedly to God and accepted the responsibility for delivering His message to man.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 87 (21:91)

This allegorical expression, used here with reference to Mary's conception of Jesus, has been widely - and erroneously - interpreted as relating specifically to his birth. As a matter of fact, the Qur'an uses the same expression in three other places with reference to the creation of man in general - namely in 15:29 and 38:72, "when I have formed him and breathed into him of My spirit" and in 32:9, "and thereupon He forms [lit., "formed"] him fully and breathes [lit., "breathed"] into him of His spirit". In particular, the passage of which the last-quoted phrase is a part (i.e., 32:7-9) makes it abundantly and explicitly clear that God "breathes of His spirit" into every human being. Commenting on the verse under consideration, Zamakhshari states that "the breathing of the spirit [of God] into a body signifies the endowing it with life": an explanation with, which Razi concurs. (In this connection, see also note 181 on 4:171.) As for the description of Mary as allati ahsanat farjaha, idiomatically denoting "one who guarded her chastity" (lit., "her private parts") it is to be borne in mind that the term ihsan - lit.,

"[one's] being fortified [against any danger or evil]" - has the tropical meaning of "abstinence from what is unlawful or reprehensible" (Taj al-'Arus), and especially from illicit sexual intercourse, and is applied to a man as well as a woman: thus, for instance, the terms muhsan and muhsanah are used elsewhere in the Qur'an to describe, respectively, a man or a woman who is "fortified [by marriage] against unchastity". Hence, the expression allati ahsanat farjaha, occurring in the above verse as well as in 66:12 with reference to Mary, is but meant to stress her outstanding chastity and complete abstinence, in thought as well as in deed, from anything unlawful or morally reprehensible: in other words, a rejection of the calumny (referred to in 4:156 and obliquely alluded to in 19:27-28) that the birth of Jesus was the result of an "illicit union".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 88 (21:91)

For my rendering of the term ayah as "symbol", see surah 17 note 2 and surah 19 note 19.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 89 (21:92)

After calling to mind, in verses 48-91, some of the earlier prophets, all of whom stressed the oneness and uniqueness of God, the discourse returns to that principle of oneness as it ought to be reflected in the unity of all who believe in Him (See 23:51.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 90 (21:93)

This is the meaning of the idiomatic phrase, taqatta u amrahum baynahum. As Zamakhshari points out, the sudden turn of the discourse from the second person plural to the third person is indicative of God's severe disapproval - His "turning away", as it were, from those who are or were guilty of breaking the believers' unity. (See also 23:53 and the corresponding note 30.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 91 (21:94)

I.e., even a breach of religious unity may not be unforgivable so long as it does not involve a worship of false deities or false moral values (cf. verses 98-99 below): this is the meaning of the stress, in this context, on man's being "a believer withal" - an echo of the principle clearly spelt out in 2:62 and several other Quranic passages.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 92 (21:95)

Lit., "an inviolable law (haram) upon", expressing the impossibility of conceiving anything to the contrary (Zamakhshari).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 93 (21:95)

I.e., whenever God consigns a community to destruction, He does it not because of its people's occasional lapses but only because of their irremediable, conscious unwillingness to forsake their sinful ways.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 94 (21:96)

I.e., until the Day of Resurrection, heralded by the allegorical break-through of "Gog and Magog" (see surah 18, note 100, especially the last sentence): for it is on that Day that even the most hardened sinner will at last realize his guilt, and be filled with belated remorse. The term hadab literally denotes "raised ground" or "elevation", but the expression min kulli hadabin is used here idiomatically, signifying "from all directions" or "from every corner [of the earth]": an allusion to the irresistible nature of the social and cultural catastrophes which will overwhelm mankind before the coming of the Last Hour.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 95 (21:97)

I.e., deliberately and without any excuse, since all the prophets had warned man of the Day of Resurrection and Judgment: cf. 14:44-45. The words "bent on" interpolated by me within brackets indicate intent, similar to the preceding expression alladhina kafaru, "those who were bent on denying the truth" (see also note 6 on 2:6).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 96 (21:98)

Zabur (lit., "scripture" or "book") is a generic term denoting any "book of wisdom": hence, any and all of the divine scriptures revealed by God to the prophets (Tabari). The statement that "My righteous servants shall inherit the earth" is obviously an echo of the promise, "You are bound to rise high if you are [truly] believers" (3:139) - the implication being that it is only through faith in God and righteous behaviour on earth that man can reach the heights envisaged for him by his Creator's grace.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 102 (21:107)

I.e., towards all mankind. For an elucidation of this fundamental principle underlying the message of the Qur'an, see 7:158 and the corresponding note 126. The universality of the Quranic revelation arises from three factors: firstly, its appeal to all mankind irrespective of descent, race or cultural environment; secondly, the fact that it appeals exclusively to man's reason and, hence, does not postulate any dogma that could be accepted on the basis of blind faith alone; and, finally, the fact that - contrary to all other sacred scriptures known to history - the Qur'an has remained entirely unchanged in its wording ever since its revelation fourteen centuries ago and will, because it is so widely recorded, forever remain so in accordance with the divine promise, "it is We who shall truly guard it [from all corruption]" (cf. 15:9 and the corresponding note 10). It is by virtue of these three factors that the Qur'an represents the final stage of all divine revelation, and that the Prophet through whom it has been conveyed to mankind is stated to have been the last (in Quranic terminology, "the seal") of all prophets (cf. 33:40).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 103 (21:108)

Edip-Layth - Quran: A Reformist Translation

Edip-Layth - End Note 1 (21:2)

The Quran is the only miracle given to Muhammad (29:51). Muhammad's mushrik companions could not comprehend that a book could be a miracle, and they wanted miracles "similar" to the ones given to the previous prophets (11:12; 17:90-95; 25:7,8; 37:7-8). Modern mushriks also demonstrated a similar reaction when God unveiled the prophesied miracle in 1974. When the miracle demanded from them the dedication of the system to God alone, and the rejection of all other "holy" teachings they have associated with the Quran, they objected, "How can there be mathematics in the Quran; the Quran is not a book of mathematics" or, "How can there be such a miracle; no previous messenger came up with such a miracle!" When a monotheist who was selected to fulfill the prophecy and discover the code started inviting his people to give up polytheism and the worship of Muhammad and clerics, he was declared an apostate by Muslim scholars in 1989, and within a year he was assassinated by a group linked to al-Qaida in early 1990 in Tucson, Arizona. The breaking of all the statues (with the exception of the biggest one) by the young Abraham was not a tyrannical action to deprive the freedom of idol worshipers, nor was it an expression of his hate. He was not in a position of authority to be a tyrant, and if he was pretending to be one, he would not have spared the biggest statue. He was using this tactic for didactical purposes. Being a member of a polytheistic society that regressed into the darkness of superstitions and dogmatism, perhaps Abraham did not have any other choice but to pull their attention with some action. Instead of showing the courage and wisdom of reflecting on that youngster's rational argument and questioning their inherited religion, the polytheists reacted with the common reaction of polytheists: group-think, threat, excommunication, and violence. See 6:74-83; 29:25.

Yunus' (Jonah) name occurs in the Quran four times as Jonah. However, in the chapter that starts with the letter N or number 50, Jonah is referred to by the expression Sahib ul-Hut, that is, The Companion of the Fish (68:48). Referring to a messenger who has the letter N in his name, with an expression that does not contain the letter N, in a chapter where the letter N is counted ($133 = 19 \times 7$), is a part of the Quran's mathematical system. Indeed, a unique expression in verse 21:87 supports this implied message.

Edip-Layth - End Note 14 (21:97)

In the light of the last verses of chapter 18, can we speculate the following: in the future some Muslim nations will create a union under the leadership of a messenger, forming a federal government, creating a peaceful, free and just society under Islamic principles (18:83-101; 9:33; 41:53; 48:28; 61:9). Before the end of the world, two rival nations will attack the Muslim community, thereby fulfilling the last condition for the end of the world (15:87; 18:94; 21:96,97).

Edip-Layth - End Note 16 (21:105)

This earth and these heavens will be replaced by new ones, and will be given to the service of the righteous people (14:48). The verse is traditionally translated as, "We wrote in Psalms after the Reminder, that my righteous servants will inherit the land." The derivatives of the word "reminder" (ZKR) are used to describe the message of the Quran and previous books, and they also have prophetic implications. For instance, see 15:9; 21:2; 21:24; 26:5; 29:51; 38:1,8; 41:41; 44:13; 72:17; 74:31,49,54.

Edip-Layth - End Note 17 (21:112)

The mathematical system of the Quran leads us to read the word QWL not as a past tense verb, but as a declarative one. Our choice is supported by the original spelling of the word, which has no letter "A" after the first letter, and thus, supports our reading. Furthermore, when read starting from verse 108, our choice fits best to the flow of the language. This is also supported by the numerical semantics (nusemantics) of the Quran: the frequency of the word QaLu (they said), as used for God's creation is equal to the frequency of the divine command QuL (say), both being 332 times. In other words, for each "they say," God tells us to "say" something. These two words are not necessarily used in successive pairs.

Ultimately, God will create a new Universe (14:48). And before that, the planet earth will see a new Dawn. Top leaders, tyrants, clergy and tycoons of wealth will lose their high empires of influence. It will be a new life for people, united as one single community as they once were. 2:213, 10:19, 39:67

Shabbir Ahmed - End Note 39 (21:107)

Mankind will become one single community through the Book revealed to you. Rahmatallil'Aalameen = Mercy for the worlds = Grace for all humanity = A benevolent advent for all nations and peoples. Furthermore, the exalted prophet is God's grace to all humanity for these reasons: 1 - The Book revealed to him appeals to all people irrespective of race, color, cast and national origin. 2 - It appeals exclusively to reason and does not require blind faith in any dogmas. 3 - It is the only perfectly preserved scripture word for word

Rashad Khalifa - The Final Testament

Rashad Khalifa - End Note 1 (21:3)

Although the Bible (Malachi 3:1) and the Quran (3:81) prophesy the advent of God's Messenger of the Covenant,when he did appear, supported by `one of the greatest miracles' ( 74:30-35),he was met with heedlessness and opposition. The divine assertion that every `new' proof is opposed has been proven by the Arabs' opposition to the Quran's miracle. (App.1 & 2).

Rashad Khalifa - End Note 3 (21:30)

The Big Bang Theory is now supported by the Creator's infalliblemathematical code (Appendix 1). Thus, it is nolonger a theory; itis a law, a proven fact.

Rashad Khalifa - End Note 8 (21:96)

By the year 2270 AD, thanks to God's mathematical miracle in the Quran (Appendix1), America will bethe heart of Islam,and billions around the globe will have believedin the Quran (9:33, 41:53, 48:28,61:9). Gogand Magog (allegorical names of villainous communities), will be the only bastions of heathenism,and they will attack the submitters. That is when the world willend (15:87,18:94, Appendix 25). Gog and Magog are mentioned in 18:94 & 21:96, 17verses before the end of each sura; this may indicate thetime of their appearance.

Edip-Layth	In the name of God, the Gracious, the Compassionate. 22:1 O people, be aware of your Lord, for the quaking of the moment is a terrible thing.
The Monotheist Group	In the name of God, the Almighty, the Merciful. 22:1 O mankind, be aware of your Lord, for the quaking of the Hour is a terrible thing.
Muhammad Asad	In the name of God, The Most Gracious, The Dispenser of Grace: 22:1 O men! Be conscious of your Sustainer: for, verily the violent convulsion of the Last Hour will be an awesome thing!
Rashad Khalifa	In the name of GOD, Most Gracious, Most Merciful. 22:1 O people, you shall reverence your Lord, for the quaking of the Hour is something horrendous.
Shabbir Ahmed	BISMILLAH-IR-RAHMAN-IR-RAHEEM With the Glorious Name of God, the Ultimate Source of Instant Beneficence and Eternal mercy Who encompasses the entire Universe, nourishing and taking care of all things for what they are meant to be; just as a mother's womb nourishes the embryo to completion without any returns. 22:1 O Mankind! Be mindful of your Sustainer so that you may journey through life in blissful honor and security. (If you failed to bring the house of humanity to order), the Hour will quake the earth with awesome wars.

Edip-Layth	22:2 The moment you see it, every nursing mother will leave her suckling child, and every pregnant one will miscarry, and you will see the people drunk while they are not drunk, but the retribution of God is most severe.
The Monotheist Group	22:2 The moment you see it, every nursing mother will leave her suckling child, and every pregnant one will miscarry, and you will see the people drunk while they are not drunk, but the retribution of God is most severe.
Muhammad Asad	22:2 On the Day when you behold it, every woman that feeds a child at her breast will utterly forget her nursling, and every woman heavy with child will bring forth her burden [before her time]; and it will seem to thee that all mankind is drunk, ¹ although they will not be drunk - but vehement will be [their dread of] God's chastisement. ²
Rashad Khalifa	22:2 The day you witness it, even a nursing mother will discard her infant, and a pregnant woman will abort her fetus. You will see the people staggering, as if they are intoxicated, even though they are not intoxicated. This is because GOD's retribution is so awesome.
Shabbir Ahmed	22:2 On the Day when you see it (wars of such intensity that) even a nursing mother would forget her infant, and the pregnant would abort her fetus. And it will seem to you that all mankind is drunk, although they will not be drunk. But the Divine requital is a tremendous thing.

E dip-Layth	22:5 O people, if you are in doubt as to the resurrection, then We have created you from dirt, then from a seed, then from an embryo, then from a fetus developed and undeveloped so that We make it clear to you. We settle in the wombs what We wish to an appointed time, then We bring you out a child, then you reach your maturity, and of you are those who will pass away, and of you are those who are sent to an old age where he will not be able to learn any new knowledge after what he already has. You see the land still, but when We send down the water to it, it vibrates and grows, and it brings forth of every lovely pair. ¹
The Monotheist Group	22:5 O mankind, if you are in doubt as to the resurrection, then We have created you from dirt, then from a seed, then from an embryo, then from a fetus developed and undeveloped so that We make it clear to you. And We settle in the wombs what We wish to an appointed time, then We bring you out a child, then you reach your maturity, and of you are those who will pass away, and of you are those who are sent to an old age where he will not be able to learn any new knowledge after what he already has. And you see the land still, but when We send down the water to it, it vibrates and grows, and it brings forth of every lovely pair.
Muhammad Asad	22:5 O MEN! If you are in doubt as to the [truth of] resurrection, [remember that,] verily, We have created [every one of] you out of dust, then out of a drop of sperm, then out of a germ-cell, then out of an embryonic lump complete [in itself] and yet incomplete ⁴ so that We might make [your origin] clear unto you. And whatever We will [to be born] We cause to rest in the [mothers'] wombs for a term set [by Us], and then We bring you forth as infants and [allow you to live] so that [some of] you might attain to maturity: for among you are such as are caused to die [in childhood], just as many a one of you is reduced in old age to a most abject state, ceasing to know anything of what he once knew so well. ⁵ And [if, O man, thou art still in doubt as to resurrection, consider this:] thou canst see the earth dry and lifeless - and [suddenly,] when We send down waters upon it, it stirs and swells and puts forth every kind of lovely plant!
Rashad Khalifa	Where Did We Come From? 22:5 O people, if you have any doubt about resurrection, (remember that) we created you from dust, and subsequently from a tiny drop, which turns into a hanging (embryo), then it becomes a fetus that is given life or deemed lifeless. We thus clarify things for you. We settle in the wombs whatever we will for a predetermined period. ²² We then bring you out as infants, then you reach maturity. While some of you die young, others live to the worst age, only to find out that no more knowledge can be attained beyond a certain limit. Also, you look at a land that is dead, then as soon as we shower it with water, it vibrates with life and grows all kinds of beautiful plants.
	22:5 O Mankind! If you are in doubt that humanity will one day stand on its feet, and that you will be resurrected back to life after death, consider the process of your own evolution. We have created you in stages: From dust, then from male and female gametes, then from a zygote, then from an embryo, shapely and first shapeless. We thus clearly explain things for you. The embryo and then the fetus

Shabbir Ahmed	stay in the womb until an appointed term according to Our laws. Then We bring you forth as infants and carry you to maturity. While some of you die young, others live to the feeblest old age so that they know nothing after knowing much. (Resurgence of humanity can take place just as) you, O Prophet, see a dry barren land, but when We send down water on it, it vibrates with life and grows all kinds of beautiful plants. ¹

Edip-Layth	22:6 That is because God is the truth, and He gives life to the dead, and He is capable of all things.
The Monotheist Group	22:6 That is because God is the truth, and He gives life to the dead, and He is capable of all things.
Muhammad Asad	22:6 All this [happens] because God alone is the Ultimate Truth, ⁶ and because He alone brings the dead to life, and because He has the power to will anything.
Rashad Khalifa	22:6 This proves that GOD is the Truth, and that He revives the dead, and that He is Omnipotent.
Shabbir Ahmed	22:6 All this happens because God alone is the Ultimate truth and He alone revives the dead and because He has Supreme Control over all things and events.

The Monotheist Group	22:7 And the Hour is coming, there is no doubt in it, and God will resurrect those who are in the graves.
Muhammad Asad	22:7 And [know, O man] that the Last Hour is bound to come, beyond any doubt, and that God will [indeed] resurrect all who are in their graves.
Rashad Khalifa	22:7 And that the Hour is coming, no doubt about it, and that GOD resurrects those who are in the graves.
Shabbir Ahmed	22:7 And know that the Hour is bound to come, beyond any doubt, and that God will certainly resurrect all who are in their graves. (And He will raise humanity onto their feet, just as He will raise the dead from their disintegrated states, whether in graves or in the oceans, in ashes, their scattered pieces sprayed about, or in the bellies of the fish and the birds etc.)

Those Who Conditionally Serve God
Edip-Layth	22:11 Among the people there is he who serves God hesitantly. So if good comes to him, he is content with it; and if an ordeal comes to him, he makes an about-face. He has lost this world and the Hereafter. Such is the clear loss.
The Monotheist Group	22:11 And from the people there is he who serves God nervously. So if good comes to him, he is content with it; and if an ordeal comes to him, he makes an about-face. He has lost this world and the Hereafter. Such is the clear loss.
Muhammad Asad	22:11 And there is, too, among men many a one who worships God on the border-line [of faith]: ⁸ thus, if good befalls him, he is satisfied with Him; but if a trial assails him, he turns away utterly, ⁹ losing [thereby both] this world and the life to come: [and] this, indeed, is a loss beyond compare! ¹⁰
Rashad Khalifa	22:11 Among the people there is the one who worships GOD conditionally. If things go his way, he is content. But if some adversity befalls him, he makes an about-face. Thus, he loses both this life and the Hereafter. Such is the real loss.
Shabbir Ahmed	22:11 And among people there is the one who serves God conditionally. If things go his way, he is content. But if some adversity touches him he flips over on his face, losing both, this world and the Hereafter. That is certainly a manifest loss. ³

The Monotheist Group	22:12 He calls upon besides God what will not harm him and what will not benefit him. Such is the far straying.
Muhammad Asad	22:12 [By behaving thus,] he invokes, instead of God, something that can neither harm nor benefit him: ¹¹ [and] this is indeed the utmost one can go astray. ¹²
Rashad Khalifa	22:12 He idolizes beside GOD what possesses no power to harm him or benefit him; such is the real straying.

The Monotheist Group	22:61 That is because God merges the night in the day, and He merges the day in the night. And God is Hearer, Seer.

Muhammad Asad	22:61 Thus it is, because God [is almighty the One who] makes the night grow longer by shortening the day, and makes the day grow longer by shortening the night; and because God is all-hearing, all-seeing. ⁷⁶
Rashad Khalifa	God's Omnipotence 22:61 It is a fact that GOD merges the night into the day, and merges the day into the night, and that GOD is Hearer, Seer.
Shabbir Ahmed	22:61 Thus it is, because God (is Omnipotent, the One who) merges the night into the day and merges the day into the night. God is Hearer, Seeing.

The Monotheist Group	22:62 That is because God is the truth, and what they call on besides Him is falsehood. And God is the Most High, the Great.
Muhammad Asad	22:62 Thus it is, because God alone is the Ultimate Truth, ⁷⁷ so that all that men invoke beside Him is sheer falsehood, and because God alone is exalted, great!
Rashad Khalifa	22:62 It is a fact that GOD is the Truth, while the setting up of any idols beside Him constitutes a falsehood, and that GOD is the Most High, the Supreme.
Shabbir Ahmed	22:62 Thus it is, because God alone is the Ultimate truth. And all that they may call on instead of Him is sheer falsehood. And because God, He alone is the Exalted, the Tremendous.

Muhammad Asad - The Message Of Quran

Muhammad Asad - End Note 1 (22:2)

Lit., "thou shalt see [or "behold"] mankind drunk", i.e., behaving as if they were drunk. The illusory purely subjective character of this "seeing" - implied it the use of the singular form tara ("thou shalt see") after the plural "you" employed in the first clause of this verse - justifies the rendering "it will seem to thee that", etc.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 2 (22:2)

My interpolation of the words "their dread of" is based on the statement in 21:103 that, as far as the righteous are concerned, "the supreme awesomeness [of the Day of Resurrection] will cause them no grief" despite the dread with which it will overwhelm every human being.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 3 (22:3)

See first half of note 16 on 15:17.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 4 (22:5)

This rendering conforms with the interpretation of the phrase mukhallaqah wa-ghayr mu khallaqah by Ibn Abbas and Qatadah (the latter quoted by Tabari and the former by Baghawi), alluding to the various stages of embryonic development. In addition, Tabari explains the expression ghayr mukhallaqah as denoting the stage at which the embryonic lump (mudghah) has as yet no individual life - or, in his words, "when no soul has as yet been breathed into it" (la yunfakh fiha ar-ruh). As regards the expression "created out of dust", it is meant to indicate man's lowly biological origin and his affinity with other "earthy" substances; see in this connection the second half of note 47 on 3:59, and note 4 on 23:12.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 5 (22:5)

See note 79 on 16:70.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 6 (22:6)

See surah 20 note 99.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 7 (22:9)

Since many unrighteous people apparently "prosper" in this world, it is clear that the disgrace of which the above verse speaks is of a moral nature - namely, a gradual coarsening of all moral perceptions and, thus, a degradation of the spirit.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 8 (22:11)

I.e., wavering between belief and disbelief, and not really committed to either.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 9 (22:11)

Lit., "he turns about on his face" - the "face" (wajh) of man signifying metonymically his whole being.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 10 (22:11)

Lit., "the [most] obvious loss".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 11 (22:12)

By failing to commit himself unreservedly to the faith which he professes, man is often inclined to attribute to all manner of extraneous forces, be they real or imaginary, a decisive "influence" on his own destiny, and thus invests them, as it were, with divine qualities.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 12 (22:12)

Lit., "this, this (dhalika huwa) is the straying far-away". For an explanation of my paraphrase, see note 25 on the last sentence of 14:18.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 13 (22:13)

The interpolation of "another human being" in the opening clause of this verse is necessitated by the relative pronoun man ("one that" or "who"), which almost always relates to an animate person - in this case a human being who, by allowing himself to be idolized by those who "worship God on the border-line of faith" causes infinite spiritual harm to himself and to his followers.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 14 (22:15)

I.e., that God is not enough to succour him: obviously an allusion to the type of man who "worships God on the border-line of faith" (verse 11 above) and therefore doubts His power to guide men towards happiness in this world and in the hereafter. The assumption of the majority of the commentators that the personal pronoun "him" relates to the Prophet Muhammad is, to my mind, very far-fetched and certainly not warranted by the context.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 15 (22:15)

The rendering of la-yaqta as "let him [try to] make headway" is based on the accepted, tropical use of the verb qataa (lit., "he cut") in the sense of "traversing a distance": and this is the interpretation of yaqta by Abu Muslim (as quoted by Razi). The expression "by any [other] means" (bi-sabab) relates to what has been said in verses 12-13 above.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 16 (22:15)

Lit., "that which causes anger" or "exasperation", i.e., anguish at finding himself helpless and abandoned.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 17 (22:16)

Or: "God guides aright whomever He wills". For an explanation of the rendering adopted by me, see note 4 on 14:4.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 18 (22:17)

See surah 2 note 49.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 19 (22:17)

Al-majus: the followers of Zoroaster or Zarathustra (Zardusht), the Iranian prophet who lived about the middle of the last millennium B.C, and whose teachings are laid down in the Zend-Avesta. They are represented today by the Gabrs of Iran and, more prominently, by the Parsis of India and Pakistan. Their religion, though dualistic in philosophy, is based on belief in God as the Creator of the universe.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 20 (22:17)

The Christians and the Magians (Zoroastrians) are included in the first category, for although they do ascribe divine qualities to other beings beside God, they regard those beings, fundamentally, as no more than manifestations - or incarnations - of the One God, thus persuading themselves that they are worshipping Him alone; whereas "those who are bent on ascribing divinity to beings other than God" (alladhina ashraku) by obvious implication reject the principle of His oneness and uniqueness.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 21 (22:18)

For the meaning of this "prostration", see 13:15 and 16:48-49, and the corresponding notes. My rendering of the relative pronoun man, in this context, as "all [things and beings] that" is explained in note 33 on 13:15.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 22 (22:18)

According to Zamakhshari and Razi, this interpolated phrase - with its stress on "consciously" - is an elliptically implied predicate (khabar) linked with the preceding nominal subject (mubtada): the purport being that although everything in creation "prostrates itself" before God, willingly or unwillingly (cf.

13:15), not all human beings do so consciously.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 23 (22:18)

Lit., "whereas upon many a one the suffering [in the life to come] has become unavoidably incumbent (haqqa alayhi)", i.e., as a necessary consequence and corollary of his attitude in this world, and not as an arbitrary "punishment" in the conventional sense of this term.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 24 (22:19)

Lit., "these two adversaries" or "antagonists", i.e., those who believe in God's oneness and uniqueness, and those who ascribe divine qualities to beings other than Him, or even deny His existence altogether.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 25 (22:19)

I.e., in distinction from those who err out of ignorance.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 26 (22:19)

For this rendering of hamim, see note 62 on the concluding sentence of 6:70, as well as note 65 on 14:50 and note 7 on 73:12-13, which mention Razi's interpretations of similar allegorical descriptions of the suffering that will befall the sinners in the hereafter.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 27 (22:20)

I.e., causing their inner and outer personality utterly to disintegrate.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 28 (22:21)

Lit., "for them will be grips (maqami) of iron". The noun miqmaah - of which maqami is the plural - is derived from the verb qamaa, signifying "he curbed" or "restrained" or "held in subjection" (Lisan al-Arab). Hence, the "iron grips" mentioned in the above verse denote the inescapability of the suffering in the hereafter to which "they who are bent on denying the truth" condemn themselves.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 29 (22:23)

See 18:31 and the corresponding note 41.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 30 (22:24)

I.e., that there is no deity save God. (One must bear in mind that the term qawl denotes not merely a "saying" but also an intellectually formulated "opinion" or "tenet".)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 31 (22:25)

This connects with the allusion, in the preceding verse, to "the way that leads to the One unto whom all praise is due".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 32 (22:25)

Lit., "who aim therein at a deviation from the right course (ilhad)" - a term which circumscribes every perversion of religious tenets.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 33 (22:25)

According to Ibn Abbas, as quoted by Ibn Hisham, this verse was revealed towards the end of the year 6 H., when the pagan Quraysh refused the Prophet and his followers, who had come on pilgrimage from Medina, the right of entry into Mecca, and thus into the sanctuary of the Kabah (the "Inviolable House of Worship"). But whether or not this claim is correct - and we have no definite historical evidence in either sense - the purport of the above verse is not restricted to any historical situation but relates to every attempt at preventing believers, be it physically or through intellectual seduction, from going on pilgrimage to this symbolic centre of their faith, or at destroying its sanctity in their eyes.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 34 (22:26)

I.e., the Kabah: see note 102 on 2:125.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 35 (22:26)

In view of the oft-repeated Quranic statement that Abraham was beyond all temptation to ascribe divinity to anything but God, it seems to me that the above injunction has a specific import, namely, "Do not allow this Temple to become an object of worship, but make it clear that it is holy only by virtue of its being the first temple ever dedicated to the worship of the One God" (cf. 3:96). Apart from that, it refers to "those who are bent on denying the truth" spoken of at the beginning of the preceding verse.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 36 (22:26)

See surah 2 note 104.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 37 (22:27)

Lit., "proclaim thou the pilgrimage among the people", i.e., the believers (Tabari). Most of the commentators assume that this passage is a continuation of God's command to Abraham; but some of them - in particular, Al-Hasan al-Basri - consider it to have been addressed to the Prophet Muhammad. (Regarding the annual pilgrimage to Mecca, as instituted in Islam, see 2:196-203 and the corresponding notes.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 38 (22:27)

Lit., "lean mount" - an expression which has induced some of the commentators to assume that it denotes "a camel that has become lean on account of a long and fatiguing journey". However, the verb dammarahu or admarahu relates in classical Arabic not only to camels but also to horses, and has the meaning of "he made it [i.e., the mount] lean and fit [for racing or war]"; thus, the noun midmar signifies "a training-ground where horses are prepared for racing or war", as well as "a race-course" (Jawhari, Asas, etc.; cf. also Lane V. 1803 f.). Hence, the adjectival noun damir - especially when contrasted, as above, with the expression rijalan ("on foot") has the connotation of "fleetness" or, more properly, "fitness for speed", and may by inference be applied to every kind of "fast conveyance".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 39 (22:28)

Lit., "that they might witness benefits [accruing] to them" - i.e., increased consciousness of God through facing the first temple ever dedicated to Him, as well as the consciousness of being part of a brotherhood embracing all believers. Apart from these spiritual benefits, the annual pilgrimage to Mecca provides an opportunity for believers from all parts of the world to become acquainted with the many social and political problems that confront the various geographically separated sectors of the community.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 40 (22:28)

The repeated Quranic insistence on pronouncing the name of God whenever one slaughters an animal is meant to make the believers "realize the awfulness of taking life, and the solemn nature of the trust which God has conferred upon them in the permission to eat the flesh of animals" (Marmaduke Pickthall, The Meaning of the Glorious Koran, London 1930, p. 342, footnote 2). As regards the "days appointed" [ayyam ma lumat] spoken of above, they apparently denote the Festival of Sacrifices, which falls on the 10th of the lunar month of Dhu 'l-Hijjah, as well as the next two days, marking the end of the pilgrimage (Ibn Abbas, as quoted by Razi).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 41 (22:28)

Whereas the pilgrims are merely permitted to eat some of the flesh of the animals which they have sacrificed, the feeding of the poor is mandatory (Tabari and Zamakhshari) and constitutes, thus, the primary objective of these sacrifices. Apart from this, they are meant to commemorate Abraham's readiness to sacrifice his first-born son (Ishmael) after he dreamt that God demanded of him this supreme sacrifice (see 37:102-107 and the corresponding notes); furthermore, they are a reminder that God is the Provider of all sustenance and the One who gives life and deals death, and that all must return to Him; and lastly (as stressed by Razi), they are to be symbols of each believer's readiness to sacrifice himself in the cause of truth.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 42 (22:29)

In Tabari's opinion, the phrase thumma 'l-yaqdu tafathahum signifies "then let them complete the acts of worship (manasik) incumbent on them by virtue of their pilgrimage". Other commentators, however, understand by the (extremely rare) expression tafath the prohibition of enjoying, while in the actual state of pilgrimage, certain bodily comforts like cutting or shaving one's hair (see 2:196), wearing any clothing but the simple, unsewn pilgrim's garb (ihram), indulging in sexual intercourse (2:197), etc. Consequently, they explain the above phrase as meaning "let them bring to an end the [condition of self-denial described as] tafath which was incumbent on them during pilgrimage".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 43 (22:29)

I.e., around the Kabah (see surah 2 notes 102 and 104), thus completing the pilgrimage.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 44 (22:30)

See the first paragraph of 5:3. Once again, the Qur'an stresses the principle that everything that has not been explicitly forbidden is per se lawful.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 45 (22:30)

The term awthan (lit., "idols") denotes not merely actual, concrete images of false deities but also, in its widest sense, everything that is associated with false beliefs and practices or with a tendency to "worship" false values: hence the subsequent injunction to shun every word that is untrue".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 46 (22:31)

For an explanation of the term hunafa (sing. hanif), see note 110 on 2:135.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 47 (22:32)

Lit., "God's symbols (sha'a'ir)" - an expression which in this context refers to the rites of pilgrimage (see the second half of note 4 on 5:2). This stress on the symbolic character of all the rites connected with the pilgrimage is meant to draw the believer's attention to the spiritual meaning of those rites, and thus to warn him against making, unthinkingly, a sort of fetish of them. - The assumption of some of the commentators that the "symbols" referred to here relate specifically to the sacrificial animals, and their sacrifice as such is not warranted by the text. As Tabari explains in his commentary on this and the next verse, the term sha'a'ir comprises all the rites, actions and places connected with the pilgrimage (all of which have symbolic meaning), and cannot be restricted to any one of them.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 48 (22:33)

I.e., "until the end of your lives" (Baydawi).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 49 (22:33)

The noun mahill, derived from the verb halla (lit., "he untied" or "undid" [e.g., a knot]", or "he loosened [a load]", or "he alighted"), denotes primarily a "destination", as well as "the time or place at which an obligation [e.g., a debt] falls due" (Taj al-'Arus). In the above context, in which this term obviously relates to the "God-consciousness" (taqwa) unequivocally mentioned in the preceding verse, it has the tropical meaning of "goal and end", implying that the realization of God's oneness and uniqueness - symbolized by the Ka'bah (the "Most Ancient Temple") - is the goal and end of all true God-consciousness.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 50 (22:34)

Lit., inasmuch as they have been wronged". Connecting with the promise, in the preceding verse, that "God will ward off [all evil] from those who attain to faith", the present verse enunciates the permission to fight physically in self-defence. All relevant Traditions (quoted, in particular, by Tabari and Ibn Kathir) show that this is the earliest Quranic reference to the problem of war as such. According to Abd Allah ibn Abbas, it was revealed immediately after the Prophet left Mecca for Medina, i.e., at the beginning of the year 1 H. The principle of war in self-defence - and only in self-defence - has been further elaborated in Al-Baqarah, which was revealed about a year later (see 2:190-193 and the corresponding notes).

Lit., "We never sent any apostle or prophet before thee without that, when he was hoping (tamanna)", etc. According to most of the commentators, the designation "apostle" (rasul) is applied to bearers of divine revelations which comprise a new doctrinal system or dispensation; a "prophet" (nabi), on the other hand, is said to be one whom God has entrusted with the enunciation of ethical principles on the basis of an already-existing dispensation, or of principles common to all divine dispensations. Hence, every apostle is a prophet as well, but not every prophet is an apostle.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 66 (22:52)

I.e., insinuating that the innermost aim (umniyyah, lit., "longing" or "hope") of the message-bearer in question was not the spiritual improvement of his community but, rather, the attainment of personal power and influence: cf. A statement which is explained in surah 6, note 98.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 67 (22:52)

Lit., "and God makes His messages clear in and by themselves", This is the meaning of the phrase yuhkimu ayatahu (cf. the expression uhkimat ayatuhu in 11:1): i.e., God causes His messages to speak for themselves, so that any insinuation as to the prophets "hidden motives" is automatically disproved. The conjunction thumma at the beginning of this clause does not connote a sequence in time but a coordination of activities, and is best rendered by the simple conjunction "and".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 71 (22:58)

For this rendering of the phrase alladhina hajarū, see note 203 on 2:218, The subsequent mention of "those who strive in God's cause, and then are slain or die" connects with the reference, in verses 39-40, to God's permission to the believers to fight in defence of their faith and liberty. The extreme merit of the self-sacrifice involved is stressed in several Quranic passages, and particularly in 4:95-96; hence, it has also a bearing on the Day of Judgment spoken of in the preceding passage.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 72 (22:59)

Or: "cause them to enter (upon their life after death) in a manner that will please them well (cf. note 40 on the last clause of 4:31) - thus implying that by sacrificing their lives in God's cause they will have obtained His forgiveness of whatever sins they may have previously committed.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 73 (22:60)

Lit., "who has retaliated with the like of what he had been afflicted with" - i.e., has acted only in self-defence and done to his enemy no more than the enemy had done to him. (A similar phrase, relating to retaliation in argument, is found in 16:126 and explained in the corresponding note 150.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 74 (22:60)

While the opening sentence of this verse stresses the principle of self-defence as the only justification of war (cf. 2:190 and 192-193) - with the proviso that retaliation must not exceed the injury initially suffered - the concluding part of the verse implies that in case of repeated, unprovoked aggression the believers are allowed to wage an all-out war with a view to destroying completely the enemy's military power. Since such an all-out war might seem to conflict with the principle of limited retaliation alluded to above, the Qur'an states that God absolves the believers of what otherwise might have been a sin, since it is they "against whom war is being wrongfully waged" (verse 39) by repeated acts of aggression.

The absence of any "hardship" in the religion of Islam is due to several factors: (1) it is free of any dogma or mystical proposition which might make the Quranic doctrine difficult to understand or might even conflict with man's innate reason; (2) it avoids all complicated ritual or system of taboos which would impose undue restrictions on man's everyday life; (3) it rejects all self-mortification and exaggerated asceticism, which must unavoidably conflict with man's true nature (cf. in this connection note 118 on the first sentence of 2:143); and (4) it takes fully into account the fact that "man has been created weak" (4:28).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 93 (22:78)

Abraham is designated here as "your forefather" not only because he was, in fact, an ancestor of the prophet Muhammad - to whose followers this passage is addressed - but also because he is the prototype (and thus, the spiritual "forefather") of all who consciously "surrender themselves to God" (see next note).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 94 (22:78)

The term muslim signifies "one who surrenders himself to God"; correspondingly, islam denotes "self-surrender to God". Both these terms are applied in the Qur'an to all who believe in the One God and affirm this belief by an unequivocal acceptance of His revealed messages. Since the Qur'an represents the final and most universal of these divine revelations, the believers are called upon, in the sequence, to follow the guidance of its Apostle and thus to become an example for all mankind (cf. 2:143 and the corresponding note 119).

The traditional rendering of verse 22:15 is so bad that it turns into an absurdity, into a joke. The amazing thing is that anyone who studies the Quran should easily understand its meaning, since the expressions are used in other verses and contexts. Instead of first looking at the usage of words and expression in other parts of the Quran, the traditional translators look for inspiration from the early commentators who mostly relied heavily on hadith hearsay. Regardless of the source, with the exception of a few, such as Muhammad Asad, Muhammad Ali, and Rashad Khalifa, many translations have duplicated the bizarre and absurd traditional rendering. For a detailed discussion of this verse, see the Sample Comparisons section in the Introduction. See 6:41.

We wished to reflect both equally plausible meanings. See 16:93; 57:22.

Edip-Layth - End Note 5 (22:19)

It is interesting that the Quran usually mentions hell and paradise after each other. While the appreciative see and enjoy the promise of heaven, the unappreciative people complain about how bad hell is. Ironically, they try very hard to enter the place they are so critical of. Though many people will end up in hell forever, it does not mean that hell is eternal. Similarly, verses informing us about disbelievers or idol worshipers staying in Hell eternally, does not necessarily mean that Hell is eternal, unless we are informed that Hell itself is eternal. It simply means that disbelievers and idol worshipers would end up in Hell and nothing else. If Hell together with its inhabitants one day ceased to exist, then the disbelievers or idol worshipers would have stayed in Hell eternally. Their punishment would be the entire life of Hell. In fact, the Quran informs us that both the eternal punishment in Hell and reward in Paradise is conditioned on their life span (11:107). Let's reflect on verse 40:11 and 67:2. The first verse refers to two creations and two deaths and the second refers to creation of death and life. These two verses can be understood better if we know that in the Quranic language, death cannot exist without life and vice versa. They exist together, since Death is the permanent halt of the brain's conscious activity (39:42; 16:21) and a temporal stage to be followed by resurrection (29:57; 10:56; 22:6). Death is a process which leads to life. A living creature will die and a dead creature will get a new life (22:66). Vegetation experiences successive lives and deaths through seasons (2:64; 3:27; 6:95; 16:65; 22:5-6; 30:19-50; 35:9). After the first creation there was no death nor life; we just existed. But, God decided to create death and life (67:2). Creation, death, life (current), death, life (resurrection). In other words, two deaths and two lives (40:11). The word HaLaKa, on the other hand, is occasionally used to describe the death of an individual (40:34), but usually irreversible destruction and annihilation, or total existential extinction of an entity (5:17; 6:6; 6:47; 8:42; 20:128; 21:95; 22:45; 28:59; 36:31; 69:5; 77:16). The Quran informs us that the Earth and the Heavens will be changed with a different Earth and Heavens (14:48). If the re-creation referred to in this verse is the one before the Day of Judgment, then there is the possibility of another re-creation. There are indications that Paradise will be preserved or created again. For instance, the word KHuLD (eternal, everlasting) is not used for Hell, but it is used as an adjective to describe Paradise (25:15). On the other hand the same adjective is not used to describe Hell, but to describe the punishment in Hell (10:52; 41:28). Verse 8:42 does not only refer to the loss of lives and surviving a particular battle, but also to a higher cosmic event: disbelievers will perish forever since they relied on falsehood, while believers will last forever since they relied on a clear argument. No wonder life and death are used as metaphors for attaining truth or falsehood (6:122). In fact, witnessing and acknowledging the truth leads to life, metaphorically and literally (8:24). From the above verse, it is fair to infer that those who reject the divine message will lose eternal life. Will they die in Hell? The answer is No: "Anyone who comes to His Lord guilty will deserve Hell, wherein he never dies, nor stays alive." (20:74). Then, the alternative is obvious: total annihilation, ontological extinction together with Hell. Those programs with free choice that chose to corrupt themselves with the worst diabolic viruses (such as associating partners with God or killing an innocent program) will be sentenced to an eternal punishment: after resurrection they will experience a period of diagnosis, justice, regret and then with the creation of a new earth and heaven, they will be hurled to non-existence together with Hell. Perhaps, their memories too will be erased from the minds of their relatives who chose eternal life by dedicating their religion to God alone and by leading a righteous life with the day of judgment in mind. It is interesting that the Quran refers to this annihilation through ultimate deletion from the ultimate record. God's deliberate deletion of their existence from His mind. (34:14). The Quran repeatedly comforts us by reminding us of God's perfect justice. The following verse provides us with a precise idea of God's justice and mercy: "For those who did good work there will be the best and more. . . As for those who earned evil, they will receive equivalent evil (10:27). Suffering in an eternal Hell creates a contradiction between this divine justice, since eternity can not be equal to an evil committed during a limited human life-span. However, eternal punishment for the lifetime of a non-eternal Hell avoids such a contradiction. After receiving an equivalent punishment, the chief evil-doers like those referred to in verse 4:48, will be eliminated from existence. They will end up in Hell and Hell will end up in nothingness. No wonder the first and the most repeated verse of the Quran reminds us over and over again that God is Gracious, Merciful (1:1).

Edip-Layth - End Note 6 (22:37)

See 6:119-121.

Edip-Layth - End Note 7 (22:47)

Time is relative. See 32:5; 70:4.

Edip-Layth - End Note 8 (22:52)

The weakness and deficiencies demonstrated by messengers and prophets provide excuses for those who try to criticize them and reject their message. On the other hand, those deficiencies and weaknesses reject the common Sunni and Shiite belief that the messengers are "innocent" or "sinless" people. Those who acknowledge and appreciate God's message are capable of distinguishing revelation from personal errors.

Edip-Layth - End Note 9 (22:78)

All messengers delivered the message of "serve only one God," and declared that they were muslims, that is peaceful surrenderers to God. With the exception of the intentional or unintentional rejection of some humans and jinns, everything in the universe are muslims, that is, behave according to the laws of God imposed on nature (41:11). For instance, Noah, Abraham, Moses, Jesus and his supporters are all described with the same word, muslim: (10:72; 2:128; 10:84; 27:31; 5:111; 72:14). The rituals of Islam first came through Abraham (16:123; 21:73). Also, see 3:19.

Rashad Khalifa - The Final Testament

Rashad Khalifa - End Note 22 (22:5)

The Quran's mathematical miracle is based on the number 19. As it turns out, this number represents the Creator's signature on His creations. Thus, you and I have 209 bones in our bodies ($209=19 \times 11$). The length of pregnancy for a full term fetus is 266 days (19×14) (Langman's Medical Embryology, T. W. Sadler, Page 88, 1985).

Rashad Khalifa - End Note 23 (22:19)

People who have insisted upon going to Hell will inevitably complain: `Had we known how bad this is, we would have behaved differently.' They will be told that the horrors of Hell have been pointed out to them in the most graphic, though symbolic, terms. It should be noted that Heaven and Hell are almost invariably mentioned together in the Quran.

Rashad Khalifa - End Note 24 (22:26)

Abraham was the original messenger of Submission (Islam). See 22:78 and App. 9. 31. You shall maintain your devotion absolutely to GOD alone. Anyone who sets up any idol beside GOD is like one who fell from the sky, then getssnatched up by vultures, or blown away by the wind into a deep ravine.

Rashad Khalifa - End Note (22:27)

Rashad Khalifa - End Note (22:33)

Rashad Khalifa - End Note 25 (22:36)

Animal offerings from the pilgrims conserve the resources at the pilgrimage site. Note that almost 2,000,000 pilgrims converge on Mecca during pilgrimage.

Rashad Khalifa - End Note 26 (22:49)

This command is directed specifically to God's Messenger of the Covenant. This fact, and the specific name of themessenger are mathematically coded into the Quran. See the details, togetherwith the irrefutable proofs, in Appendices 2 and 26.

Rashad Khalifa - End Note 27 (22:52)

Throughout this worldly test, Satan is allowed to present his point of view (we are born with a representative of Satan in our bodies). This allows the peopleto make a choice between God's evidence and Satan's evidence. Satan's evidenceis invariably based on lies. This system explains the fact that the devil'sagents continuously come up with the most absurd lies, insults and accusationsagainst every messenger (see 6:33-34, 8:30, 17:76-77, 27:70).

Rashad Khalifa - End Note (22:52)

Rashad Khalifa - End Note 28 (22:78)

Although all messengers preached one and the same message, ``Worship God alone," Abraham was the first messenger to coin the terms "Submission" (Islam) and "Submitter" (Muslim) (2:128). What did Abraham contribute to Submission? We learn from 16:123 that all religious duties in Submission were revealed through Abraham (see Appendices 9 & 26).

Recapturing the earlier stages of evolution, We initiated life from inorganic matter, the clay, then hydrated clay. Through it We brought forth the single life cell, the unicellular organism. Then We created the male and the female cells. Thus procreation came into play. Male and female gametes join, a clot, a little lump of flesh, turning into the embryo that 'hangs' in the womb. The embryo is partly formed and partly unformed, until it becomes the fetus and then assumes the final evident proportions. Muhammad Asad	23:24 But the great ones among his people, who refused to acknowledge the truth, replied: This [man] is nothing but a mortal like yourselves who wants to make himself superior to you! For, if God had willed [to convey a message unto us], He would surely have sent down angels; [moreover,] we have never heard [anything like] this from our forebears of old! ¹¹

Rashad Khalifa	23:24 The leaders who disbelieved among his people said, "This is no more than a human like you, who wants to gain prominence among you. Had GOD willed, He could have sent down angels. We never heard of anything like this from our ancestors.
Shabbir Ahmed	23:24 But the leaders in his community who refused to acknowledge the truth, said, "This is only a man like you who wants to become prominent among you. God could have sent angels if He willed (to convey a message to us). We never heard this from our forefathers.

The Monotheist Group	23:27 So We inspired him: "Construct the Ship under Our eyes and Our inspiration. Then, when Our command comes and the volcano erupts, then you shall take on the Ship two from every pair, and your family; except for those of them upon whom the word has come. And do not address Me regarding those who have done wrong, for they will be drowned."
Muhammad Asad	23:27 Thereupon We inspired him thus: Build, under Our eyes ¹² and according to Our inspiration, the ark [that shall save thee and those who follow thee]. ¹³ And when Our judgment comes to pass, and waters gush forth in torrents over the face of the earth, place on board of this [ark] one pair of each [kind of animal] of either sex, as well as thy family - excepting those on whom sentence has already been passed; and do not appeal to Me [any more] in behalf of those who are bent on evildoing - for, behold, they are destined to be drowned!
Rashad Khalifa	23:27 We then inspired him: "Make the watercraft under our watchful eyes, and in accordance with our inspiration. When our command comes, and the atmosphere boils up, put on it a pair of every kind (of your domesticated animals), and your family, except those condemned to be doomed. Do not speak to Me on behalf of those who transgressed; they will be drowned.
Shabbir Ahmed	23:27 Then We revealed to him thus, "Build the ark, under Our eyes and according to Our revealed instructions. Then, as Our command comes to pass and the torrent gushes forth, take on board a couple each of the domesticated animals - As well as your family and followers except the one against whom the Word has already gone forth (for his persistent denial). Muhammad Asad - The Message Of Quran Lit., "working for" or "active in behalf of [inner] purity, which is the meaning of zakah in this context (Zamakhshari; the same interpretation has been advanced by Abu Muslim).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 2 (23:5)

Lit., "who guard their private parts".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 3 (23:6)

Lit., "or those whom their right hands possess" (aw ma malakat aymanuhum). Many of the commentators assume unquestioningly that this relates to female slaves, and that the particle aw ("or") denotes a permissible alternative. This interpretation is, in my opinion, inadmissible inasmuch as it is based on the assumption that sexual intercourse with one's female slave is permitted without marriage: an assumption, which is contradicted by the Qur'an itself (see 4:3, 24, 25 and 24:32, with the corresponding notes). Nor is this the only objection to the above-mentioned interpretation. Since the Qur'an applies the term "believers" to men and women alike, and since the term azwaj ("spouses"), too, denotes both the male and the female partners in marriage, there is no reason for attributing to the phrase ma malakat aymanuhum the meaning of "their female slaves"; and since, on the other hand, it is out of the question that female and male slaves could have been referred to here it is obvious that this phrase does not relate to slaves at all, but has the same meaning as in 4:24 - namely, "those whom they rightfully possess through wedlock (see note 26 on 4:24) - with the significant difference that in the present context this expression relates to both husbands and wives, who "rightfully possess" one another by virtue of marriage. On the basis of this interpretation, the particle aw which precedes this clause does not denote an alternative ("or") but is, rather, in the nature of an explanatory amplification, more or less analogous to the phrase "in other words" or "that is", thus giving to the whole sentence the meaning, "save with their spouses - that is, those whom they rightfully possess [through wedlock]", etc. (Cf. a similar construction 25:62 - "for him who has the will to take thought -that is [lit., "or"], has the will to be grateful".)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 4 (23:12)

The frequent Quranic references to man's being "created out of clay or out of dust" or (as in this instance) "out of the essence (sulalah) of clay" point to the fact that his body is composed of various organic and inorganic substances existing on or in the earth, as well as to the continuous transmutation of those substances, through the intake of earth-grown food, into reproductive cells (Razi) - thus stressing man's humble origin, and hence the debt of gratitude which he owes to God for having endowed him with a conscious soul. The past tense in verses 12-14 (lit., "We have created", "We have caused him to remain", etc.) emphasizes the fact that all this has been ordained by God and has been happening again and again ever since man was brought into being by Him; in the above context, this recurrence is brought out best by the use of the present tense.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 5 (23:14)

Lit., "as another creature", i.e., existing independently of the mother's body.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 6 (23:14)

Lit., "the best of creators". As Tabari points out, the Arabs apply the designation "creator" to every artisan (sani) - a usage also current in European languages with reference to the "creation" of works of art and imagination. Since God is the only Creator in the real, primary sense of this word, the phrase ahsan al-khaliqin must be understood in this secondary sense of the term khaliq (cf. Taj al-'Arus, art. khalaqa).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 7 (23:17)

Lit., "seven paths", which may signify the orbits of the visible planets or - as the classical commentators assume - the "seven heavens" (i.e., cosmic systems) repeatedly spoken of in the Qur'an. In either case, the number "seven" is used metonymically, indicating multiplicity. See in this connection note 20 on 2:29.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 8 (23:20)

I.e., the olive-tree, native to the lands around the eastern Mediterranean, where so many pre-Quranic prophets (here symbolized - because of its sacred associations - by Mount Sinai) lived and preached.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 9 (23:21)

Lit., "of them".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 10 (23:23)

Sc., "who had lost sight of all the multiform evidence of the Creator's uniqueness and, thus, all gratitude for the innumerable blessings which He bestows upon man".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 11 (23:24)

Lit., "in connection with (fi) our early forebears" - a Quranic allusion to the fact that people often reject a new ethical proposition on no better grounds than that, it conflicts with their "inherited" habits of thought and ways of life. Indirectly, this allusion implies a condemnation of all blind taqlid, i.e., an unthinking acceptance of religious doctrines or assertions, which are not unequivocally supported by divine revelation, the explicit teachings of a prophet, or the evidence of unprejudiced reason.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 12 (23:27)

I.e., "under Our protection".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 13 (23:27)

Regarding this interpolation, see surah 11 note 60. For an explanation of the passage that follows, see 11:40 and the corresponding notes 62-64. The reason for the (abbreviated) repetition of Noah's story - given in much greater detail in 11:25-48 - becomes evident from verse 29.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 14 (23:29)

Lit., "Cause me to alight with a blessed alighting" - i.e., in a blessed condition of alighting, or at a blessed place of alighting (Tabari); both these meanings are implied in the word "destination".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 15 (23:29)

Lit., "the best of all who cause [man] to alight", i.e., at his true destination. In this prayer enjoined upon Noah - and, by implication, on every believer - the story of the ark is raised to symbolic significance: it reveals itself as a parable of the human soul's longing for divine illumination, which alone can show man how to save himself and to reach his true destination in the realm of the spirit as well as in worldly life.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 16 (23:31)

Lit., "a generation (qarn) of others". For a wider meaning of the term qarn, see surah 6 note 5.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 17 (23:32)

Most of the classical commentators assume that the apostle referred to in verses 32-41 is Hud, the prophet of the tribe of Ad (see surah 7 note 48). Since, however, this passage contains elements appearing in the stories of many prophets - including that of the Prophet Muhammad - I am of the opinion that it has a general import: namely, an allusion to all of God's apostles and to the ever-recurring similarity of their experiences.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 18 (23:33)

Thus Tabari interprets the concise but meaningful phrase atrafnahum fi l-hayati d-dunya. For a fuller explanation of the verb tarifa, see note 147 on 11:116.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 19 (23:40)

Lit., "they will surely become of those who feel remorse".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 20 (23:41)

The expression bi l-haqq (lit., "in accordance with truth" or "with justice") combines in this instance the concepts of justice, wisdom, reality, inescapability, and consonance with the exigencies of the case under consideration (Raghib), and can be only approximately rendered in translation.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 21 (23:42)

Lit., "generations of others", i.e., new civilizations.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 22 (23:43)

See note 5 on the identical phrase in 15:5.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 23 (23:46)

Moses and Aaron are mentioned here by name because their case was different from that of all other prophets: they were rejected not by their own community but by their community's oppressors.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 24 (23:48)

Lit., "became of those who were destroyed".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 25 (23:50)

For my rendering of ayah, in this instance, as "symbol", see surah 19 note 16. Jesus and his mother Mary are mentioned here specifically because they, too, had to suffer persecution and slander at the hands of "those who were bent on denying the truth".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 26 (23:50)

I.e., in paradise. The expression (ma'in) signifies "unsullied springs" or "running waters" (Ibn Abbas, as quoted by Tabari; also Lisan al-Arab and Taj al-'Arus), and thus symbolizes the spiritual purity associated with the concept of paradise, the "gardens through which running waters flow".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 27 (23:51)

This rhetorical apostrophe to all of God's apostles is meant to stress their humanness and mortality, and thus to refute the argument of the unbelievers that God could not have chosen "a mortal like ourselves" to be His message-bearer: an argument which overlooks the fact that only human beings who themselves "partake of the good things of life" are able to understand the needs and motives of their fellow-men and, thus, to guide them in their spiritual and social concerns.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 28 (23:52)

As in 21:92, the above verse is addressed to all who truly believe in God, whatever their historical denomination. By the preceding reference to all of God's apostles the Qur'an clearly implies that all of them were inspired by, and preached, the same fundamental truths, notwithstanding all the differences in the ritual or the specific laws which they propounded in accordance with the exigencies of the time and the social development of their followers. (See notes 66-68 on the second paragraph of 5:48.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 29 (23:53)

Cf. 21:93.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 30 (23:53)

Lit., "in what they have [themselves]". In the first instance, this verse refers to the various religious groups as such: that is to say, to the followers of one or another of the earlier revelations who, in the course of time, consolidated themselves within different "denominations", each of them jealously guarding its own set of tenets, dogmas and rituals and intensely intolerant of all other ways of worship (manasik, see 22:67). In the second instance, however, the above condemnation applies to the breach of unity within each of the established religious groups; and since it applies to the followers of all the prophets, it includes the latter-day followers of Muhammad as well, and thus constitutes a prediction and condemnation of the doctrinal disunity prevailing in the world of Islam in our times - cf. the well-authenticated saying of the Prophet quoted by Ibn Hanbal, Abu Da'ud, Tirmidhi and Darimi: "The Jews have been split up into seventy-one sects, the Christians into seventy-two sects, whereas my community will be split up into seventy-three sects." (It should be remembered that in classical Arabic usage the number "seventy" often stands for "many" - just as "seven" stands for "several" or "various" - and does not necessarily denote an actual figure; hence, what the Prophet meant to say was that the sects and divisions among the Muslims of later days would become many, and even more numerous than those among the Jews and the Christians.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 31 (23:54)

I.e., until they themselves realize their error. This sentence is evidently addressed to the last of the apostles, Muhammad. and thus to all who truly follow him.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 32 (23:56)

I.e., "Do they think that by bestowing on them worldly prosperity God but wants them to vie with one another in their race after material goods and comforts, which they mistakenly identify with doing good works?" Another - linguistically permissible - rendering of the above two verses would be: "Do they think that by all the wealth and offspring with which We provide them We [but] hasten on [the coming] to them of all that is good?" Either of these two renderings implies, firstly, that worldly prosperity is not the ultimate good, and, secondly, that the breach of the unity spoken of in the preceding passage was, more often than not, an outcome of mere worldly greed and of factional striving after power.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 33 (23:60)

This is an allusion to the giving of what one is morally obliged to give, whether it be in charity or in satisfaction of rightful claims on the part of one's fellow-men, including such intangible "gifts" as the dispensing of justice.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 34 (23:63)

This passage obviously connects with the last sentence of verse 56 - "Nay, but they do not perceive [their error]!" - and, hence, refers to the people spoken of in verse 54 as being "lost in their ignorance" (fi ghamratihim).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 35 (23:63)

Namely, actions and dogmatic assertions which utterly contradict the teachings of the very apostles whom they claim to follow, like ascribing divine qualities to beings other than God, worshipping saints, or rejecting divine revelations which do not accord with their own likes and dislikes or with their customary mode of thinking.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 36 (23:64)

See surah 17 note 22. The particular reference, in this context, to people "who [at present] are lost in the pursuit of pleasures" contains an allusion to verse 55 above (see my explanation in note 32, especially the last sentence). The "taking to task through suffering spoken of here may refer to the Day of Judgment or - as in 17:16 - to the inevitable social ruin which, in the long run, wrong beliefs and actions bring with themselves in this world.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 37 (23:66)

This is the meaning implied in the auxiliary verb kanat, preceded by the particle qad.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 38 (23:67)

Lit., "as one who keeps awake at night" (samiran). In combination with the phrase kuntum . . . tahjurun, this expression indicates the pursuit of endless, fruitless discussions divorced from all reality, or a mere play with words leading nowhere. (See also 31:6 and the corresponding note 4.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 39 (23:68)

Implying that the message of the Qur'an is but a continuation of all the divine messages ever revealed to man.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 40 (23:70)

I.e., they hate to admit the truth: the reason being - as the sequence shows - that the world-view propounded by the Qur'an is not in accord with their own likes and dislikes or preconceived notions.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 41 (23:71)

I.e., the reality of all creation.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 42 (23:71)

I.e., if the universe - and, especially, human life - had been as devoid of meaning and purpose as they imagine, nothing could have endured, and everything would have long since perished in chaos.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 43 (23:71)

For this rendering of the term dhikr, see note 13 on 21:10.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 44 (23:72)

The terms kharj and kharaj which occur in the above verse are more or less synonymous, both of them denoting "recompense". According to Zamakhshari, however, there is a slight difference between these two expressions, kharj being more restricted in its meaning than kharaj: hence, the first has been rendered as "worldly recompense" and the second as "recompense" without any restrictive definition, implying that a recompense from God is unlimited, relating both to this world and the hereafter.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 45 (23:75)

Sc., "as it inevitably befalls all human beings": an oblique allusion to the fact that human life is never free from distress.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 46 (23:76)

Lit., "We took them to task".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 47 (23:77)

Or: "they will despair of all hope".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 48 (23:84)

Lit., "and all who are on it".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 49 (23:86)

Lit., "who is the Sustainer (rabb) of the seven heavens" - see note 20 on 2:29 - "and the Sustainer of the awesome throne of almightiness": cf. 9:129 as well as note 43 on 7:54.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 50 (23:89)

Sc., "as to deny the prospect of resurrection".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 51 (23:90)

Lit., "they are indeed liars"- i.e., they deceive themselves by asserting that they believe in God and, at the same time, rejecting the idea of a life after death, which - in view of the fact that many wrongdoers prosper in this world while many righteous lead a life of suffering - is insolubly bound up with the concept of divine justice. Apart from this, a denial of the possibility of resurrection implies a doubt as to God's unlimited power and, thus, of His Godhead in the true sense of this concept. This latter doubt often finds its expression in the mystic belief in a multiplicity of divine powers: and it is to this erroneous belief that the next verse alludes.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 52 (23:91)

This allusion to the pre-Islamic Arabian belief in angels as "God's daughters" and the Christian dogma of Jesus' "sonship of God" connects with the statement "they are intent on lying [to themselves]", which has been explained in the preceding note.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 53 (23:91)

This is how almost all the classical commentators explain the phrase la-dhahaba bi-ma khalaqa (lit., "would surely have taken away whatever he had created"), implying that in such a hypothetical case each of the gods would have been concerned only with his own sector of creation, thus causing complete confusion in the universe.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 54 (23:91)

See note 88 on 6:100.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 55 (23:92)

See surah 6 note 65.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 56 (23:93)

Lit., "to show me" [sc., "in my lifetime"]. According to Zamakhshari, the combination of the conditional particle in ("if") with ma ("that which" or "whatever") - spelt and pronounced imma - endows the verb turini (lit., "Thou wilt show me") with the quality of intrinsic necessity - thus: "If it is inevitable (la budd) that "thou show me [or "let me witness"]", etc. In translation, this particular phrasing is best rendered as above, since anything that is God's will becomes eo ipso inevitable.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 57 (23:96)

See surah 13 note 44. In the present context, the evil referred to consists - as the next clause shows - in blasphemous attempts at "defining" God (cf. verse 91); but the ethical principle implied in the above injunction is the same as that expressed in the last clause of 13:22 as well as in 41:34 namely, that evil must not be countered with another evil but, rather, repelled by an act of goodness.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 58 (23:97)

Lit., "of the satans" or "satanic forces": see note 10 on 2:14.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 59 (23:99)

Cf. verses 74 and 90 above, with which the present passage connects.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 60 (23:99)

Most of the commentators regard the plural form of address in the verb irji'uni ("let me return") as an expression of reverence. Since, however, the Qur'an offers no other instance of God's being addressed in the plural (in contrast with the frequent use of the plural in His speaking of Himself), Baydawi suggests - on the strength of examples from pre-Islamic poetry - that this plural form of address is equivalent to an emphatic repetition of the singular form irji ni: hence the repetition of this phrase in my rendering.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 61 (23:100)

Lit., "in respect of that which (fi-ma) I have left", comprising both the omission of good and the commission of bad deeds.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 62 (23:106)

Lit., "we became people who go astray". This allegorical "dialogue" is meant to bring out the futile excuse characteristic of so many sinners who attribute their failings to an abstract bad luck" (which is the meaning of shiqwah in this context); and thus, indirectly, it stresses the element of free will - and, therefore, of responsibility - in man's actions and behaviour.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 63 (23:108)

My interpolation of the word "ignominy" is based on the fact that this concept is inherent in the verb khasaa (lit., "he drove [someone or something] scornfully away"), and is, therefore, forcefully expressed in the imperative ikhsa'u.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 64 (23:109)

Lit., "the best of those [or "of all"] who show mercy". The same expression is found in the concluding verse of this surah.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 65 (23:110)

Lit., "until they made you forget": i.e., "your scoffing at them became the cause of your forgetting".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 66 (23:113)

This part of the allegorical "dialogue" between God and the doomed sinners touches (as do several other verses of the Qur'an) upon the illusory, problematical character of "time" as conceived by man, and the comparative irrelevancy of the life of this world within the context of the ultimate - perhaps timeless - reality known only to God. The disappearance, upon resurrection, of man's earth-bound concept of time is indicated by the helpless answer, "ask those who are able to count time".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 67 (23:115)

Lit., "that you would not be brought back to Us", i.e., for judgment.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 68 (23:116)

See surah 20 note 99.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 69 (23:116)

Lit., "the Sustainer (rabb) of the bountiful throne of almightiness (al -arsh al-karim)". See also surah 7 note 43, for an explanation of my rendering of al-arsh as "the throne of [His] almightiness".

Shabbir Ahmed -

Shabbir Ahmed - End Note 1 (23:5)

17:32

Shabbir Ahmed - End Note 2 (23:6)

The very common rendition of this verse is extremely misleading. The ancient and modern scholars, to my knowledge, with the solitary exception of Allama Muhammad Asad in his 'The Message Of The Qur'an, think that slave girls are being mentioned here. But, Ma Malakat Ayemaanahum is common gender. Could the translators have said that it was right for a bondman to have sex with his 'owner' woman, and that too, when she was married? The translators and exponents confined it to the females alone since in the second century after the exalted prophet, Muslims, under the influence of corrupted kings and Imams, had begun reverting to the old ways of Jaahilyah. Some verses foretell these conspiracies: 6:112-113, 22:52-55, 25:31, 42:13-14, 45:16-18. The word AW in 23:6 is explanatory. Edip-Layth - Quran: A Reformist Translation

Edip-Layth - End Note 1 (23:6)

It refers to those who were concubines before the revelation that prohibited slavery and gave them freedom. Though the Quran prohibited slavery for muslims, at that time, slavery and wars were the reality of the polytheistic world. Prohibited relationships that started before the revelation of the Quran, were not asked to be voided, since that would create bigger psychological, economic and social problems. In other words, the laws of the Quran in the sphere of marriage relationships was not applied retroactively (4:22-23). Also, see 4:3,25; 90:1-20.

Edip-Layth - End Note 2 (23:14)

Embryo is the name of the stage when the fertilized egg hangs on the wall of uterus. The word alaq, which we translated as embryo has three meanings in Arabic, (1) blood clot; (2) a hanging object; (3) leech. It is normal for medieval commentators who were ignorant of embryology, to render the meaning of the word alaq as "clot," since it is an organic ingredient of the human body. However, it is no excuse for modern commentators and translators who blindly copy from medieval books, to render this word as "clot," since there is not a stage, from fertilization of the embryo until birth, that could be described as "clot." See 46:15; 95:2.

Edip-Layth - End Note 3 (23:24)

The most ardent opponents of God's messengers have always been the blind followers of the traditions of their ancestors. The opposition against those who invite to the "Quran alone" in modern times demonstrates a similar mindset and reaction. Throughout history, the modus operandi of polytheists, have not changed much. They show the same weakness, the same knee-jerk reaction, the same ancestor-worship, the same gullibility, the same belligerent attitude, the same bigotry, the same ignorance and arrogance, and the same apathy and fear towards learning the truth. Polytheists are the riders of twin horses, named Ignorance and Arrogance. To protect themselves from tearing apart, they spend a lot of effort to keep the two competing twin horses at the same speed and distance.

Edip-Layth - End Note 4 (23:27)

Storytellers have exaggerated the size and scope of the flood, turning it into a mythology. Noah's ark was not a colossus ship, but a boat comprised of several logs connected with ropes (54:13); the flood was not global, but limited to Noah's people around the Dead Sea region, the lowest point on the land; the animals taken to the boat, were not members of all species, but the domesticated animals in Noah's farm.

Edip-Layth - End Note 6 (23:53)

See 30:32; 3:188. Compare it to the New Testament: "And I say unto you, that many shall come from the east and west, and shall sit down with Abraham and Isaac and Jacob in the kingdom of heaven. But those who believe they own the kingdom of heaven shall be cast out into the outer darkness. There shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth." (Matthew 8:11-12)

Edip-Layth - End Note 7 (23:84)

Acknowledging God means accepting all of God's attributes as defined by God. Thus, those who do not acknowledge God's absolute control over His creation (8:17), His being the only source of law (12:40), are in fact not acknowledging God.

Edip-Layth - End Note 8 (23:100)

This verse rejects the idea of reincarnation and the spirits/souls of dead people roaming on earth. Communication with the dead is not allowed.

Rashad Khalifa - End Note 2 (23:84)

Belief in God is valid only if one recognizes God's qualities, such as the fact that God controls everything(8:17). Believers who do not know God are not really believers. Most believers nullify their belief by idolizing such powerless idols as the prophets and saints(6:106).

Edip-Layth	In the name of God, the Gracious, the Compassionate. 24:1 A chapter which We have sent down and imposed, and We have sent down in it clear revelations that you may remember.
The Monotheist Group	In the name of God, the Almighty, the Merciful. 24:1 A chapter which We have sent down and imposed, and We have sent down in it clear revelations that you may remember.
Muhammad Asad	In the name of God, The Most Gracious, The Dispenser of Grace: 24:1 A Surah [is this] which We have bestowed from on high, and which We have laid down in plain terms; 1 and in it have We bestowed from on high messages which are clear [in themselves], so that you might keep [them] in mind.
Rashad Khalifa	In the name of GOD, Most Gracious, Most Merciful. 24:1 A sura that we have sent down, and we have decreed as law. We have revealed in it clear revelations, that you may take heed.
Shabbir Ahmed	BISMILLAH-IR-RAHMAN-IR-RAHEEM With the Glorious Name of God, the Ultimate Source of Instant Beneficence and Eternal mercy Who encompasses the entire Universe, nourishing and taking care of all things for what they are meant to be; just as a mother's womb nourishes the embryo to completion without any returns. 24:1 This is a Surah that We have sent down with a decree of law. Clear commandments have been given in it for you to bear in mind.

Edip-Layth	Adultery 24:2 The adulteress and the adulterer, you shall lash each of them one hundred lashes, and do not let any pity take you over God's system if you acknowledge God and the Last Day. Let a group of the acknowledgers witness their punishment.¹
The Monotheist Group	24:2 The adulteress and the adulterer, you shall lash each of them with one hundred lashes, and do not let any pity overtake you regarding God's system if you believe in God and the Last Day. And let a group of the believers witness their punishment.
Muhammad Asad	24:2 AS FOR the adulteress and the adulterer ² flog each of them with a hundred stripes, and let not compassion with them keep you from [carrying out] this law of God, if you [truly] believe in God and the Last Day; and let a group of the believers witness their chastisement.³
Rashad Khalifa	Adultery 24:2 The adulteress and the adulterer you shall whip each of them a hundred lashes. Do not be swayed by pity from carrying out GOD's law, if you truly believe in GOD and the Last Day. And let a group of believers witness their penalty.
Shabbir Ahmed	24:2 The adulteress and the adulterer, flog each one of them with a hundred stripes. And let not compassion sway you in their case from carrying out God's law, if you believe in God and the Last Day. And let a group of believers witness the penalty. ¹

Edip-Layth	24:3 The adulterer will only marry an adulteress or one who is an idolatress. The adulteress, she will only be married to an adulterer or an idolater. This has been forbidden for the acknowledgers.
The Monotheist Group	24:3 The adulterer will only marry an adulteress or one who is an idolatress. And the adulteress, she will only be married to an adulterer or an idolater. And this has been forbidden for the believers.
Muhammad Asad	24:3 [Both are equally guilty:] the adulterer couples with none other than an adulteress - that is, a woman who accords [to her own lust] a place side by side with God;⁴ and with the adulteress couples none other than an adulterer - that is, a man who accords [to his own lust] a place side by side with God: and this is forbidden unto the believers.⁵
Rashad Khalifa	24:3 The adulterer will end up marrying an adulteress or an idol worshiper, and the adulteress will end up marrying an adulterer or an idol worshiper. This is prohibited for the believers.
Shabbir Ahmed	24:3 The adulterer couples with none but an adulteress who worships her desires. And with the adulteress none couples but the adulterer who worships his desires. And it is forbidden to the believers. ²

Edip-Layth	24:4 Those who accuse the independent women and they do not bring forth four witnesses, then you shall lash them eighty lashes and do not ever accept their testimony. Those indeed are the evildoers; ²
The Monotheist Group	24:4 And those who accuse the protected women and they do not bring forth four witnesses, then you shall lash them eighty lashes and do not ever accept their testimony. Those indeed are the evildoers.
Muhammad Asad	24:4 And as for those who accuse chaste women [of adultery], ⁶ and then are unable to produce four witnesses [in support of their accusation], flog them with eighty stripes ⁷ and ever after refuse to accept from them any testimony - since it is they, they that are truly depraved!
Rashad Khalifa	24:4 Those who accuse married women of adultery, then fail to produce four witnesses, you shall whip them eighty lashes, and do not accept any testimony from them; they are wicked.
Shabbir Ahmed	24:4 (Protecting the honor of a woman is extremely important.) Those who accuse chaste women and then fail to produce four witnesses (the court of law shall order) eighty lashes to such accusers. And never in the future accept their testimony. They have drifted away from morality. ³

Edip-Layth	24:6 Those who accuse their wives, but they have no witnesses except for themselves, then the testimony of one of them should be four testimony, swearing by God that he is being truthful.
The Monotheist Group	24:6 And those who accuse their wives, but they have no witnesses except for themselves, then the testimony of one of them is to be equivalent to that of four witnesses if he is swearing by God that he is being truthful.

Muhammad Asad	24:6 And as for those who accuse their own wives [of adultery], but have no witnesses except themselves, let each of these [accusers] call God four times to witness that he is indeed telling the truth, ⁹
Rashad Khalifa	24:6 As for those who accuse their own spouses, without any other witnesses, then the testimony may be accepted if he swears by GOD four times that he is telling the truth.
Shabbir Ahmed	24:6 As for those who accuse their wives, but have no witnesses except themselves, then let the accuser call God four times to witness that he is telling the truth.

Edip-Layth	24:11 Those who have brought forth the false accusation were a group from within you. Do not think it is bad for you, for it is good for you. Every person amongst them will have what he deserves of the sin. As for he who had the greatest portion of it, he will have a great retribution. ³
The Monotheist Group	24:11 Those who have brought forth the false accusation were a group from within you. Do not think it is bad for you, for it is good for you. Every person amongst them will have what he deserves of the sin. And as for he who had the greatest portion of it, he will have a great retribution.
Muhammad Asad	24:11 Verily, numerous among you are those who would falsely accuse others of unchastity: ¹² [but, O you who are thus wronged,] deem it not a bad thing for you: nay, it is good for you! ¹³ [As for the slanderers,] unto every one of them [will be accounted] all that he has earned by [thus] sinning; and awesome suffering awaits any of them who takes it upon himself to enhance this [sin]! ¹⁴
Rashad Khalifa	How to Deal With Rumors and Unproven Accusations 24:11 A gang among you produced a big lie. Do not think that it was bad for you; instead, it was good for you. Meanwhile, each one of them has earned his share of the guilt. As for the one who initiated the whole incident, he has incurred a terrible retribution.
Shabbir Ahmed	24:11 Surely, there are numerous among you who would slander others. Deem not that this (law of eighty lashes and calling God to Witness) is harsh for you. Nay, it is good for you since every slanderer will have to account for what he earns through this dragging violation of human dignity. In the Divine System an awesome punishment awaits anyone who magnifies the slander (trying to make it believable).

Had it not been for God's favor upon you and His mercy, not one of you would have ever been purified, but God purifies whom He wishes, and God is Hearer, Knower.
The Monotheist Group	24:21 O you who believe, do not follow the footsteps of the devil. And whosoever follows the footsteps of the devil should know that he advocates immorality and evil. And had it not been for God's favor upon you and His mercy, not one of you would have ever been purified, but God purifies whom He wishes, and God is Hearer, Knower.
Muhammad Asad	24:21 O You who have attained to faith! Follow not Satan's footsteps: for he who follows Satan's foot steps [will find that], behold, he enjoins but deeds of abomination and all that runs counter to reason. ²⁴ And were it not for God's favour upon you and His grace, not one of you would ever have remained pure. For [thus it is:] God who causes whomever He wills to grow in purity: for God is all-hearing, all-knowing.
Rashad Khalifa	The Devil Encourages Baseless Accusations 24:21 O you who believe, do not follow the steps of Satan. Anyone who follows the steps of Satan should know that he advocates evil and vice. If it were not for GOD's grace towards you, and His mercy, none of you would have been purified. But GOD purifies whomever He wills. GOD is Hearer, Knower.
Shabbir Ahmed	24:21 O You who have chosen to be graced with belief! Follow not the steps of satanic people in the community. Anyone who follows Satan's footsteps should know that he advocates evil and vice. Had it not been for the favor of God, and His grace to you, none of you could have grown in goodness. Thus it is - but anyone can develop the 'self' (attain Self-actualization) by following God's laws (given in the Qur'an). God is Hearer, Knower. ⁵

Edip-Layth	24:22 Let not those amongst you who have been blessed with abundance refuse to give to the relatives, the needy, and those who have immigrated in the cause of God. Let them pardon and forgive. Would you not like God to forgive you? God is Forgiving, Compassionate.
The Monotheist Group	24:22 And let not those amongst you who have been blessed with abundance refuse to give to the relatives, and the needy, and those who have immigrated in the cause of God. Let them pardon and forgive. Would you not like God to forgive you? And God is Forgiving, Merciful.
Muhammad Asad	24:22 Hence, [even if they have been wronged by slander,] let not those of you who have been graced with God's favour and ease of life ever become remiss in helping²⁵ [the erring ones among] their near of kin, and the needy, and those who have forsaken the domain of evil for the sake of God, ²⁶ but let them pardon and forbear. [For,] do you not desire that God should forgive you your sins, seeing that God is much-forgiving, a dispenser of grace?²⁷
Rashad Khalifa	24:22 Those among you who are blessed with resources and wealth shall be charitable towards their relatives, the poor, and those who have immigrated for the sake of GOD. They shall treat them with kindness and tolerance; do you not love to attain GOD's forgiveness? GOD is Forgiver, Most Merciful.
Shabbir Ahmed	24:22 So, (even if you have been slandered) let not those of you who have been graced with bounties and resources, ever miss out in helping their relatives, the needy, and those who have forsaken the domain of evil for the sake of God. But let them pardon and overlook the imperfections of others. Do you not desire that God should forgive you your faults and absolve your imperfections? Certainly, God is Forgiving, Merciful. ⁶

Privacy; Dawn and Evening Prayers
Edip-Layth	24:58 O you who acknowledge, let those whom are under your contract and have not yet attained puberty request your permission regarding three times: Before the dawn contact prayer, and when you take off your attire from the heat of the noon, and after the dusk contact prayer. These are three private times for you. Other than these times, it is not wrong for you or them to intermingle with one another. God thus clarifies the revelations for you. God is Knowledgeable, Wise. 10
The Monotheist Group	24:58 O you who believe, let those who are committed to you by oath, and those who have not yet attained puberty, request your permission regarding three times: before the dawn communion, and when you put off your attire from the noon time, and after the evening communion. These are three private times for you. Other than these times, it is not wrong for you or them to intermingle with one another. God thus clarifies the revelations for you. And God is Knowledgeable, Wise.
Muhammad Asad	24:58 O YOU who have attained to faith! 77 At three times [of day], let [even] those whom you rightfully possess, 78 as well as those from among you who have not yet attained to puberty, 79 ask leave of you [before intruding upon your privacy]: before the prayer of daybreak, and whenever you lay aside your garments in the middle of the day, and after the prayer of nightfall: 80 the three occasions on which your nakedness is likely to be bared. 81 Beyond these [occasions], neither you nor they will incur any sin if they move [freely] about you, attending to [the needs of] one another. In this way God makes clear unto you His messages: for God is all-knowing, wise!
Rashad Khalifa	Etiquette, Two Prayers Mentioned by Name 24:58 O you who believe, permission must be requested by your servants and the children who have not attained puberty (before entering your rooms). This is to be done in three instances - before the Dawn Prayer, at noon when you change your clothes to rest, and after the Night Prayer. These are three private times for you. At other times, it is not wrong for you or them to mingle with one another. GOD thus clarifies the revelations for you. GOD is Omniscient, Most Wise.
Shabbir Ahmed	24:58 (Your social mannerism begins at home.) O You who have chosen to be graced with belief! Let your servants and children who have not yet come of age ask your permission before coming in to see you on three occasions: Before you engage in your assignments at dawn, at noon when you are resting with light clothes, and after you have completed your assignments at night. These are your three times of privacy. At other times it is not wrong for you or for them to move about freely, attending to one another. In this way, God makes clear to you the revelations. God is Knower, Wise.

The Monotheist Group	24:59 And when the children among you reach puberty, then let permission be sought from them like it was sought from those before them. God thus clarifies His revelations for you. And God is Knowledgeable, Wise.
Muhammad Asad	24:59 Yet when the children among you attain to puberty, let them ask leave of you [at all times], even as those [who have reached maturity] before them have been enjoined to ask it. ⁸² In this way God makes clear unto you His messages: for God is all-knowing, wise!
Rashad Khalifa	24:59 Once the children reach puberty, they must ask permission (before entering) like those who became adults before them have asked permission (before entering). GOD thus clarifies His revelations for you. GOD is Omniscient, Most Wise.

Muhammad Asad - The Message Of Quran

Muhammad Asad - End Note 1 (24:1)

I.e., "the injunctions whereof We have made self-evident by virtue of their wording: thus, according to Bukhari (Kitab at-Tafsir), Abd Allah ibn Abbas explains the expression faradnaha in this context (cf. Fath al-Bari VIII, 361). Tabari also on the authority of Ibn Abbas advances the same explanation. It would seem that the special stress on God's having laid down this surah "in plain terms" is connected with the gravity of the injunctions spelt out in the sequence: in other words, it implies a solemn warning against any attempt at widening or re-defining those injunctions by means of deductions, inferences or any other considerations unconnected with the plain wording of the Qur'an.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 2 (24:2)

The term zina signifies voluntary sexual intercourse between a man and a woman not married to one another, irrespective of whether one or both of them are married to other persons or not: hence, it does not - in contrast with the usage prevalent in most Western languages - differentiate between the concepts of "adultery" (i.e., sexual intercourse of married man with a woman other than his wife, or of a married woman with a man other than her husband) and "fornication" (i.e., sexual intercourse between two unmarried persons). For the sake of simplicity I am rendering zina throughout as "adultery", and the person guilty of it as "adulterer" or "adulteress", respectively.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 3 (24:2)

The number of those to be present has been deliberately left unspecified, thus indicating that while the punishment must be given publicly, it need not be made a "public spectacle".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 4 (24:3)

The term mushrik (fem. mushrikah), which normally signifies a person who associates in his or her mind all manner of imaginary deities or forces with God, or who believes that any created being has a share in His qualities or powers, is here evidently used in the widest metaphorical sense of this term, denoting one who accords to his or her desires a supremacy which is due to God alone, and thus blasphemes against the principles of ethics and morality enjoined by Him. The particle aw (lit., "or") which connects the word mushrikah with the preceding word zaniyah ("adulteress") has in this context - as well as in the next clause, where both these terms appear in their masculine form - an amplifying, explanatory value equivalent to the expression "in other words" or "that is", similar to the use of this particle in 23:6. For a further elucidation of the above passage, see next note.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 5 (24:3)

Some of the commentators understand this passage in the sense of an injunction: "The adulterer shall not marry any but an adulteress or a mushrikah: and as for the adulteress, none shall marry her but an adulterer or a mushrik. This interpretation is objectionable on several counts: firstly, the Qur'an does not ever countenance the marriage of a believer, however great a sin he or she may have committed, with an unbeliever (in the most pejorative sense of this term); secondly, it is a fundamental principle of Islamic Law that once a crime has been expiated by the transgressor's undergoing the ordained legal punishment (in this case, a hundred stripes), it must be regarded, insofar as the society is concerned, as atoned for and done with; and, lastly, the construction of the above passage is clearly that of a statement of fact (Razi), and cannot be interpreted as an injunction. On the other hand, since adultery is an illicit sexual union, the verb yankihu, which appears twice in this passage, cannot have the customary, specific meaning of "he marries" but must, rather, be understood in its general sense - applicable to both lawful and unlawful sexual intercourse - namely, "he couples with". It is in this sense that the great commentator Abu Muslim (as quoted by Razi) explains the above verse, which stresses the fact that both partners are equally guilty inasmuch as they commit their sin consciously - implying that neither of them can cause himself or herself on the ground of having been merely "seduced".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 6 (24:4)

The term rnuhsanat denotes literally "women who are fortified [against unchastity]", i.e., by marriage and/or faith and self-respect, implying that, from a legal point of view, every woman must be considered chaste unless a conclusive proof to the contrary is produced. (The passage relates to women other than the accusers own wife, for in the latter case - as shown in verses 6-9 - the law of evidence and the consequences are different.

By obvious implication, this injunction applies also to cases where a woman accuses a man of illicit sexual intercourse, and is subsequently unable to prove her accusation legally. The severity of the punishment to be meted out in such cases, as well as the requirement of four witnesses - instead of the two that Islamic Law regards as sufficient in all other criminal and civil suits - is based on the imperative necessity of preventing slander and off-hand accusations. As laid down in several authentic sayings of the Prophet, the evidence of the four witnesses must be direct, and not merely circumstantial: in other words, it is not sufficient for them to have witnessed a situation which made it evident that sexual intercourse was taking or had taken place: they must have witnessed the sexual act as such, and must be able to prove this to the entire satisfaction of the judicial authority (Razi, summing up the views of the greatest exponents of Islamic Law). Since such a complete evidence is extremely difficult, if not impossible, to obtain, it is obvious that the purpose of the above Quranic injunction is to preclude, in practice, all third-party accusations relating to illicit sexual intercourse - for, "man has been created weak" (4:28) - and to make a proof of adultery dependent on a voluntary, faith-inspired confession of the guilty parties themselves.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 8 (24:5)

I.e., who publicly withdraw their accusation after having suffered the punishment of flogging - which, being a legal right of the wrongly accused person, cannot be obviated by mere repentance and admission of guilt. Thus, the above-mentioned exemption relates only to the interdict on giving testimony and not to the punishment by flogging.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 9 (24:6)

Lit., "then the testimony of any of these shall be four testimonies [or "solemn affirmations"] before God".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 10 (24:9)

Thus, the husband's accusation is to be regarded as proven if the wife refuses to take an oath to the contrary, and disproved if she solemnly sets her word against his. Inasmuch as this procedure, which is called li'an ("oath of condemnation"), leaves the question of guilt legally undecided, both parties are absolved of all the legal consequences otherwise attending upon adultery - resp. an unproven accusation of adultery - the only consequence being a mandatory divorce.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 11 (24:10)

This sentence, which introduces the section dealing with the condemnation of all unfounded or unproven accusations of unchastity - as well as the similar sentence which closes it in verse 20 - is deliberately left incomplete, leaving it to man to imagine what would have happened to individual lives and to society if God had not ordained all the above-mentioned legal and moral safeguards against possibly false accusations, or if He had made a proof of adultery dependent on mere circumstantial evidence. This idea is further elaborated in verses 14-15.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 12 (24:11)

Lit., "those who brought forth the lie (al-ifk, here denoting a false accusation of unchastity) are a numerous group (usbah) among you". The term usbah signifies any group of people, of indeterminate number, banded together for a particular purpose (Taj al-'Arus). According to all the commentators, the passage comprising verses 11-20 relates to an incident, which occurred on the Prophet's return from the campaign against the tribe of Mustaliq in the year 5 H. The Prophet's wife A'ishah, who had accompanied him on that expedition, was inadvertently left behind when the Muslims struck camp before dawn. After having spent several hours alone, she was found by one of the Prophet's Companions, who led her to the next halting-place of the army. This incident gave rise to malicious insinuations of misconduct on the part of A'ishah; but these rumours were short-lived, and her innocence was established beyond all doubt. As is the case with all Quranic allusions to historical events, this one, too, is primarily meant to bring out an ethical proposition valid for all times and all social circumstances: and this is the reason why the grammatical construction of the above passage is such that the past-tense verbs occurring in verses 11-16 can be - and, I believe, should be - understood as denoting the present tense.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 13 (24:11)

I.e., in the sight of God: for, the unhappiness caused by unjust persecution confers - as does every undeserved and patiently borne suffering - a spiritual merit on the person thus afflicted. Cf. the saying of the Prophet, quoted by Bukhari and Muslim: "Whenever a believer is stricken with any hardship, or pain, or anxiety, or sorrow, or harm, or distress - even if it be a thorn that has hurt him - God redeems thereby some of his failings."

Muhammad Asad - End Note 14 (24:11)

I.e., by stressing, in a legally and morally inadmissible manner, certain "circumstantial" details or aspects of the case in order to make the slanderous, unfounded allegation more believable.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 15 (24:12)

Lit., "whenever you hear it" - the pronoun "you" indicating here the community as a whole.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 16 (24:13)

This interpolation is necessary in view of the fact that the believers spoken of in the preceding verse are blamed, not for making the false accusation, but for not giving it the lie.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 17 (24:13)

Lit., "in support thereof" (alayhi).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 18 (24:14)

Sc., "yourselves and your whole society". With this and the next verse the discourse returns to, and elaborates, the idea touched upon in verse 10 and explained in the corresponding note 11.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 19 (24:16)

The interjection subhanaka ("O Thou who art limitless in Thy glory") stresses here the believers moral duty to bethink himself of God whenever he is tempted to listen to, or to repeat, a calumny (since every such rumour must be considered a calumny unless its truth is legally proved).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 20 (24:19)

The term fahishah signifies anything that is morally reprehensible or abominable: hence, "immoral conduct" in the widest sense of this expression. In the above context it refers to unfounded or unproven allegations of immoral conduct, in other words, "foul slander".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 21 (24:19)

I.e., the legal punishment as stipulated in verse 4 of his surah.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 22 (24:19)

This Quranic warning against slander and, by obvious implication, against any attempt at seeking out other people's faults finds a clear echo in several well-authenticated sayings of the Prophet: "Beware of all guesswork [about one another], for, behold, all [such] guesswork is most deceptive (akdhab al-hadith); and do not spy upon one another and do not try to bare [other people's] failings" (Muwatta; almost identical versions of this Tradition have been quoted by Bukhari, Muslim and Abu Da'ud): "Do not hurt those who have surrendered themselves to God (al-muslimin) and do not impute evil to them and do not try to uncover their nakedness [i.e., their faults]: for, behold, if anyone tries to uncover his brother's nakedness, God will uncover his own nakedness [on the Day of judgment]" (Tirmidhi); and, "Never does a believer draw a veil over the nakedness of the other believer without Gods drawing a veil over his own nakedness on Resurrection Day" (Bukhari). All these injunctions have received their seal, as it were, in the Quranic exhortation: "Avoid most guesswork [about one another] - for, behold, some of [such] guesswork is [in itself] a sin" (49:12).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 23 (24:20)

See verse 10 of this surah and the corresponding note 11.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 24 (24:21)

In this context, the term al-munkar has apparently the same meaning as in 16:90 (explained in the corresponding note 109) since, as the sequence shows, it clearly relates to the unreasonable self-righteousness of so many people who "follow Satan's footsteps" by imputing moral failings to others and forgetting that it is only due to Gods grace that man, in his inborn weakness, can ever remain pure.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 25 (24:22)

Or: "Swear that [henceforth] they would not help [lit., "give to"]", etc. Both these meanings - "he swore [that]" and "he became remiss [in]" - are attributable to the verb ala, which appears in the above sentence in the form ya tal. My rendering is based on the interpretation given to this verb by the great philologist Abu Ubayd al-Qasim al-Harawi (Cf. Lane I, 84).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 26 (24:22)

For an explanation of this rendering of the designation al-muhajirun (or, in other places, alladhina hajarun), see surah 2 note 203.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 27 (24:22)

It is generally assumed that this verse refers to Abu Bakr, who swore that he would never again help his poor relative, the muhajir Mistah (whom he used to support until then) after the latter had taken part in slandering Abu Bakr's daughter, A'ishah (see note 12 above). There is no doubt that this assumption of the commentators is well-founded; but there is also no doubt that the ethical purport of the above verse is timeless and, therefore, independent of the fact or facts with which it appears to be historically linked. (This view finds additional support in the use of the plural form throughout the above passage.) The call to "pardon and forbear" is fully consonant with the Quranic principle of countering evil with good (see 13:22 and the corresponding note 44).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 28 (24:23)

According to Razi, the absence of repentance is incontrovertibly implied in the condemnation expressed in the sequence. since the Qur'an makes it clear in many places that God always accepts a sinner's sincere repentance.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 29 (24:23)

Lit., "chaste, unmindful [or "careless"] believing women", i.e., virtuous women who thoughtlessly expose themselves to situations on which a slanderous construction may be put.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 30 (24:25)

Regarding the double meaning ("manifest" and "manifesting") inherent in the adjective mubin, see note 2 on 12:1; for my rendering of God's attribute al-haqq as "the Ultimate Truth", see note 99 on 20:114. In this particular instance, the active form of mubin ("manifesting") apparently relates to Gods revelation, on Judgment Day, of the true nature of man's actions and, thus, of the enormity of the sin to which this passage refers.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 31 (24:26)

Lit., "innocent of all that they [i.e., the slanderers] may say".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 32 (24:26)

See note 5 on 8:4. The reference, in this context, to God's "forgiveness of sins" (maghfirah) is obviously meant to stress the innate weakness of man's nature, which makes him prone to sinning, however good and pure he may be (cf. 4:28).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 33 (24:27)

This categorical prohibition connects with the preceding passages inasmuch as it serves as an additional protection of individuals against possible slander. In its wider purport, it postulates the inviolability of each person's home and private life, (For the socio-political implications of this principle, see State and government in Islam, pp. 84 ff.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 34 (24:28)

I.e., by the rightful owner or caretaker.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 35 (24:29)

Lit., "uninhabited houses wherein there are things of use (mata) for you". In the consensus of all the authorities, including the Companions of The Prophet, this relates to buildings or premises of a more or less public nature, like inns, shops, administrative Offices, public baths, etc., as well as to ancient ruins.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 36 (24:30)

Lit., "to restrain [something] of their gaze and to guard their private parts". The latter expression may be understood both in the literal sense of "covering of one's private parts" - i.e., modesty in dress - as well as in the metonymical sense of "restraining one's sexual urges", i.e., restricting them to what is lawful, namely, marital intercourse (cf. 23:5-6). The rendering adopted by me in this instance allows for both interpretations. The "lowering of ones gaze", too, relates both to physical and to emotional modesty (Razi).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 37 (24:31)

My interpolation of the word "decently" reflects the interpretation of the phrase illa ma zahara minha by several of the earliest Islamic scholars, and particularly by Al-Qiffal (quoted by Razi) as "that which a human being may openly show in accordance with prevailing custom (al-adah al-jariyah)". Although the traditional exponents of Islamic Law have for centuries been inclined to restrict the definition of "what may [decently] be apparent" to a woman's face, hands and feet - and sometimes even less than that - we may safely assume that the meaning of illa ma zahara minha is much wider, and that the deliberate vagueness of this phrase is meant to allow for all the time-bound changes that are necessary for man's moral and social growth. The pivotal clause in the above injunction is the demand, addressed in identical terms to men as well as to women, to "lower their gaze and be mindful of their chastity": and this determines the extent of what, at any given time, may legitimately - i.e., in consonance with the Quranic principles of social morality - be considered "decent" or "indecent" in a person's outward appearance.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 38 (24:31)

The noun khimar (of which khumur is the plural) denotes the head-covering customarily used by Arabian women before and after the advent of Islam. According to most of the classical commentators, it was worn in pre-Islamic times more or less as all ornament and was let down loosely over the wearer's back; and since, in accordance with the fashion prevalent at the time, the upper part of a woman's tunic had a wide opening in the front, her breasts cleavage were left bare. Hence, the injunction to cover the bosom by means of a khimar, (a term so familiar to the contemporaries of the Prophet) does not necessarily relate to the use of a khimar as such but is, rather, meant to make it clear that a woman's breasts are not included in the concept of "what may decently be apparent" of her body and should not, therefore, be displayed.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 39 (24:31)

I.e., very old men. The preceding phrase "those whom they rightfully possess" (lit., "whom their right hands possess") denotes slaves; but see also note 78.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 40 (24:31)

Lit., "so that those of their charms which they keep hidden may become known", The phrase yadribna bi-arjulihinna is idiomatically similar to the phrase daraba bi-yadayhi fi mishyatihi, "he swung his arms in walking" (quoted in this context in Taj al-'Arus), and alludes to a deliberately provocative gait.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 41 (24:31)

The implication of this general call to repentance is that "since man has been created weak" (4:28), no one is ever free of faults and temptations - so much so that even the Prophet used to say, "Verily, I turn unto Him in repentance a hundred times every day" (Ibn Hanbal, Bukhari and Bayhaqi, all of them, on the authority of Abd Allah ibn Umar).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 42 (24:32)

I.e., from among the free members of the community, as is evident from the subsequent juxtaposition with slaves. (As most of the classical commentators point out, this is not an injunction but a recommendation to the community as a whole: hence my interpolation of the words, "you ought to".) The term ayyim - of which ayama is the plural - signifies a person of either sex who has no spouse, irrespective of whether he or she has never been married or is divorced or widowed. Thus, the above verse expresses the idea - reiterated in many authentic sayings of the Prophet - that, from both the ethical and the social points of view, the married state is infinitely preferable to celibacy.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 43 (24:32)

The term as-salihin connotes here both moral and physical fitness for marriage: i.e., the attainment of bodily and mental maturity as well as mutual affection between the man and the woman concerned. As in 4:25, the above verse rules out all forms of concubinage and postulates marriage as the only basis of lawful sexual relations between a man and his female slave.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 44 (24:33)

I.e., because of poverty or because they cannot find a suitable mate, or for any other personal reason.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 45 (24:33)

Lit., "whom your right hands possess", i.e., male or female slaves.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 46 (24:33)

The noun kitab is, in this context, an equivalent of kitabah or mukatabah (lit., "mutual agreement in writing"), a juridical term signifying a "deed of freedom" or "of manumission" executed on the basis of an agreement between a slave and his or her owner, to the effect that the slave undertakes to purchase his or her freedom for an equitable sum of money payable in installments before or after the manumission, or, alternatively, by rendering a clearly specified service or services to his or her owner. With this end in view, the slave is legally entitled to engage in any legitimate, gainful work or to obtain the necessary sum of money by any other lawful means (e.g., through a loan or a gift from a third person). In view of the imperative form of the verb katibuhum ("write it out for them"), the deed of manumission cannot be refused by the owner, the only pre-condition being an evidence - to be established, if necessary, by an unbiased arbiter or arbiters - of the slave's good character and ability to fulfill his or her contractual obligations. The stipulation that such a deed of manumission may not be refused, and the establishment of precise juridical directives to this end, clearly indicates that Islamic Law has from its very beginning aimed at an abolition of slavery as a social institution, and that its prohibition in modern times constitutes no more than a final implementation of that aim. (See also next note, as well as note 146 on 2:177.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 47 (24:33)

According to all the authorities, this relates (a) to a moral obligation on the part of the owner to promote the slave's efforts to obtain the necessary revenues by helping him or her to achieve an independent economic status and/or by remitting part of the agreed-upon compensation, and (b) to the obligation of the state treasury (bayt al-mal) to finance the freeing of slaves in accordance with the Quranic principle - enunciated in 9:60 - that the revenues obtained through the obligatory tax called zakah are to be utilized, among other purposes, "for the freeing of human beings from bondage" (fi r-riqab, an expression explained in surah 2 note 146). Hence, Zamakhshari holds that the above clause is addressed not merely to persons owning slaves but to the community as a whole - The expression "the wealth of God" contains an allusion to the principle that "God has bought of the believers their lives and their possessions, promising them paradise in return" (9:111) - implying that all of man's possessions are vested in God, and that man is entitled to no more than their usufruct.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 48 (24:33)

Lit., "so that you might seek out" or "endeavour to attain to".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 49 (24:33)

Lit., "if they desire protection against unchastity (tahassun)", i.e., through marriage (cf. the expression muhsanat as used in 4:24). Most of the classical commentators are of the opinion that the term fatayat ("maidens") denotes here "slave-girls": an assumption which is fully warranted by the context hence, the above verse reiterates the prohibition of concubinage by explicitly describing it as "whoredom" (bigha).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 50 (24:35)

The particle ka ("as if" or "as it were") prefixed to a noun is called kaf at-tashbih ("the letter kaf pointing to a resemblance [of one thing to another]" or "indicating a metaphor"). In the above context it alludes to the impossibility of defining God even by means of a metaphor or a parable - for, since "there is nothing like unto Him" (42:11, there is also "nothing that could be compared with Him" (112:4). Hence, the parable of "the light of God" is not meant to express His reality - which is inconceivable to any created being and, therefore, inexpressible in any human language - but only to allude to the illumination which He, who is the Ultimate Truth, bestows upon the mind and the feelings of all who are willing to be guided. Tabari, Baghawi and Ibn Kathir quote Ibn Abbas and Ibn Mas'ud as saying in this context: "It is the parable of His light in the heart of a believer."

Muhammad Asad - End Note 51 (24:35)

The "lamp" is the revelation which God grants to His prophets and which is reflected in the believer's heart - the "niche" of the above parable (Ubayy ibn Kab, as quoted by Tabari) - after being received and consciously grasped by his reason ("the glass [shining brightly] like a radiant star"): for it is through reason alone that true faith can find its way into the heart of man.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 52 (24:35)

It would seem that this is an allusion to the organic continuity of all divine revelation which, starting like a tree from one "root" or proposition - the statement of God's existence and uniqueness - grows steadily throughout man's spiritual history, branching out into a splendid variety of religious experience, thus endlessly widening the range of man's perception of the truth. The association of this concept with the olive-tree apparently arises from the fact that this particular kind of tree is characteristic of the lands in which most of the prophetic precursors of the Quranic message lived, namely, the lands to the east of the Mediterranean: but since all true revelation flows from the Infinite Being, it is "neither of the east nor of the west" - and especially so the revelation of the Qur'an, which, being addressed to all mankind, is universal in its goal as well.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 53 (24:35)

The essence of the Quranic message is described elsewhere as "clear [in itself] and clearly showing the truth" (cf. note 2 on 12:1) and it is, I believe, this aspect of the Qur'an that the above sentence alludes to. Its message gives light because it proceeds from God; but it would well-nigh give light [of itself] even though fire had not touched it": i.e., even though one may be unaware that it has been "touched by the fire" of divine revelation, its inner consistency, truth and wisdom ought to be self-evident to anyone who approaches it in the light of his reason and without prejudice.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 54 (24:35)

Although most of the commentators read the above phrase in the sense of "God guides unto His light whomever He wills", Zamakhshari gives it the sense adopted in my rendering (both being syntactically permissible).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 55 (24:35)

I.e., because of their complexity, certain truths can be conveyed to man only by means of parables or allegories: see first and the last notes 5 and 8 on 3:7.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 56 (24:36)

Lit., "and [ordained] that His name", etc.: implying, as the sequence shows, that the spiritual purpose of those houses of worship is fulfilled only by some, and not all, of the people who are wont to congregate in them out of habit.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 57 (24:37)

lit., "bargaining" or "selling" or "buying and selling" (bay) - a metonym for anything that might bring worldly gain.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 58 (24:37)

For this rendering of the term zakah, see surah 2 note 34.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 59 (24:39)

I.e., he is bound to realize on Judgment Day that all his supposedly "good" deeds have been rendered worthless by his deliberate refusal to listen to the voice of truth (Zamakhshari and Razi).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 60 (24:40)

I.e., their bad deeds, as contrasted with their good deeds, which in the preceding verse have been likened to a mirage.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 61 (24:40)

Lit., "one above another".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 62 (24:41)

Cf. 17:44 and the corresponding note 53.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 63 (24:45)

See note 39 on 21:30. The term dabbah denotes every corporeal being endowed with both life and spontaneous movement; hence, in its widest sense, it comprises the entire animal world, including man.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 64 (24:46)

Or: "God guides whomever He wills onto a straight way". The rendering adopted by me in this instance seems preferable in view of the preceding, intensive stress on the evidence, forthcoming from all nature, of God's creative, planning activity and the appeal to "all who have eyes to see" to let themselves be guided by this overwhelming evidence.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 65 (24:48)

I.e., in order that the divine writ - which is implied in the preceding expression "God and His Apostle" - might determine their ethical values and, consequently, their social behaviour.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 66 (24:49)

Lit., "if the truth happens to be with them, they come to it willingly": cf. 4:60-61 and the corresponding notes 80.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 67 (24:50)

I.e., by depriving them of what they choose to regard as "legitimate" liberties and enjoyments, or by supposedly preventing them from "keeping up with the times". As in verses 47 and 48 (as well as in verse 51 below) the expression "God and His Apostle" is here a synonym for the divine writ revealed to the Apostle.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 68 (24:51)

Lit., "The only saying of the believers is that they say" - i.e., without any mental reservation. The term qawl (lit., "saying") has here the sense of a genuine spiritual "response" in contrast to the mere lip-service alluded to in verse 47 above.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 69 (24:53)

This is an allusion to the ephemeral, self-deceiving enthusiasms of the half-hearted and their supposed readiness for "self-sacrifice" contrasting with their obvious reluctance to live up to the message of the Qur'an in their day-to-day concerns.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 70 (24:53)

This elliptic phrase alludes to the principle - repeatedly stressed in the Qur'an - that God does not burden man with more than he can easily bear.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 71 (24:55)

Lit., "cause them to be successors on earth" - i.e., enable them to achieve, in their turn, power and security and, thus, the capability to satisfy their worldly needs, this Quranic reference to God's "promise" contains an oblique allusion to the God-willed natural law which invariably makes the rise and fall of nations dependent on their moral qualities.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 72 (24:55)

Cf. 5: 3 "I have willed that self-surrender unto Me (al-islam) shall be your religion". Its firm establishment (tamkin) relates to the strengthening of the believers' faith as well as to the growth of its moral influence in the world.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 73 (24:55)

Lit., "exchange for them, after their fear [or "danger"] security". It is to be noted that the term amn signifies not merely outward, physical security but also - and, indeed, originally - "freedom from fear" (Taj al-'Arus). Hence, the above clause implies not only a promise of communal security after an initial period of weakness and danger (which, as history tells us, overshadows the beginnings of every genuine religious movement), but also the promise of an individual sense of inner security - that absence of all fear of the Unknown, which characterizes a true believer. (See next note.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 74 (24:55)

I.e., the believer's freedom from fear is a direct outcome of his intellectual and emotional refusal to attribute to anyone or anything but God the power to shape his destiny.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 75 (24:56)

The specific mention of the "purifying dues" (az-zakah) in this context is meant to stress the element of unselfishness as an integral aspect of true faith. According to Zamakhshari, the above verse connects with, and concludes, verse 54.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 76 (24:57)

For an explanation of the above sentence and the words interpolated by me, see note 39 on a similar phrase in 11:20.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 77 (24:58)

In pursuance of the Quranic principle that the social and individual - as well as the spiritual and material - aspects of human life form one indivisible whole and cannot, therefore, be dealt with independently of one another, the discourse returns to the consideration of some of the rules of healthy social behaviour enunciated in the earlier parts of this surah. The following passage takes up and elaborates the theme of the individual's right to privacy, already touched upon in verses 27-29 above.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 78 (24:58)

Lit., "whom your right hands possess" - a phrase which, primarily and as a rule, denotes male and female slaves. Since, however, the institution of slavery is envisaged in the Qur'an as a mere historic phenomenon that must in time be abolished (cf. note 46 and 47 on verse 33 of this surah, as well as note 146 on 2:177), the above expression may also be understood as referring, in general, to one's close dependants and to domestic servants of either sex. Alternatively, the phrase ma malakat aymanukum may denote, in this context, "those whom you rightfully possess through wedlock", i.e., wives and husbands (cf. 4:24 and the corresponding note 26).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 79 (24:58)

I.e., all children, irrespective of whether they are related to one or not.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 80 (24:58)

The term zahirah (lit., "midday" or, occasionally, "heat of midday"), which occurs in the Qur'an only in this one instance, may have been used metonymically in the sense of "day-time" as contrasted with the time after the prayer of nightfall and before the prayer of daybreak: hence my tentative rendering as "middle of the day".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 81 (24:58)

Lit., "three [periods] of nakedness (thalath awrat) for you". This phrase is to be understood both literally and figuratively. Primarily, the term awrah signifies those parts of a mature person's body which cannot in decency be exposed to any but one's wife or husband or, in case of illness, one's physician. In its tropical sense, it is also used to denote spiritual "nakedness", as well as situations and circumstances in which a person is entitled to absolute privacy. The number "three" used twice in this context is not, of course, enumerative or exclusive, but is obviously meant to stress the recurrent nature of the occasions on which even the most familiar members of the household, including husbands, wives and children, must respect that privacy.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 82 (24:59)

Lit., "have asked it": a reference to the injunction laid down in verses 27-28 above. My interpolation, between brackets, of the phrase "who have reached maturity" is based on Zamakhshari's interpretation of the words "those before them".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 83 (24:60)

This conjunction is, I believe, meant to indicate that the verse which it introduces is connected with certain previously revealed passages, namely, verse 31 above and 33:59, both of which allude to the principle of modesty to be observed by Muslim women in the matter of dress: hence, it must be regarded as a separate "section".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 84 (24:60)

Lit., "who do not desire [or "hope for"] sexual intercourse" - the latter evidently being the meaning of nikah in this context. Although this noun, as well as the verb from which it is derived, is almost always used in the Qur'an in the sense of "marriage" or "marrying", there are undoubtedly exceptions from this general rule: for instance, the manner in which the verbal form yankihu is used in verse 3 of this surah (see the corresponding note 5 above). These exceptions confirm the view held by some philologists of great renown e.g., al-jawhari or Al-Azhari (the latter quoted in the Lisan al-Arab), to the effect that "in the speech of the Arabs, the original meaning of nikah is sexual intercourse (al-wat)".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 85 (24:61)

The whole of verse 61 is construed in so highly elliptic a form that disagreements as to its purport have always been unavoidable. However, if all the explanations offered by the early commentators are taken into consideration, we find that their common denominator is the view that the innermost purport of this passage is a stress on the brotherhood of all believers, expressed in a call to mutual charity, compassion and good-fellowship and, hence, the avoidance of all unnecessary formalities in their mutual relations.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 86 (24:61)

In the consensus of all the authorities, the expression "your houses" implies in this context also "your children's houses", since all that belongs to a person maybe said to belong, morally, to his parents as well.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 87 (24:61)

I.e., "for which you are responsible".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 88 (24:62)

lit., "a uniting [or "collective"] matter" (amr jami). The personal pronoun in "with him" relates to the Apostle and, by analogy, to every legitimate leader (imam) of the Muslim community acting in accordance with the spirit of the Qur'an and the Prophet's life-example.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 89 (24:62)

I.e., his permission to abstain, for valid reasons, from participating in a course of action or a policy agreed upon by the majority of the community (amma ijتماعu lahu min al-amr: Tabari). In a logical development of this principle we arrive at something like the concept of a "loyal opposition", which implies the possibility of dissent on a particular point of communal or state policy combined with absolute loyalty to the common cause. See also note 91.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 90 (24:62)

I.e., after weighing the reasons advanced by the individual or the individuals concerned against the interests of the society as a whole.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 91 (24:62)

The statement that "God is much-forgiving" obviously implies that an avoidance of "asking leave" to abstain from participation in an agreed-upon course of action is, under all circumstances morally preferable (Zamakhshari).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 92 (24:63)

I.e., his summons to God's message in general, spoken of in verses 46-54 above, as well as to a particular course of communal action, referred to in verse 62. Alternatively, "the Apostles summons" may, in this context, be synonymous with the Qur'an itself.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 93 (24:64)

Lit., "well does He know upon what you are": i.e., "what your beliefs are and what moral principles govern your attitudes and actions".

Edip-Layth - Quran: A Reformist Translation

Edip-Layth - End Note 1 (24:2)

Public shaming, though it has long been abandoned in Western world, is one of the tools we may use against crimes. The Quran gives high importance to the institution of marriage. Social and psychological problems experienced among millions of children because of the breakdown of marriage institution in otherwise prosperous Western countries justify the importance of marriage. Additionally, the harms of the promiscuous lifestyle to the health and well being of the society is another reason why the Quran takes marriage contract so seriously and issues a harsh penalty for its violation. The verse emphasizes public shame rather than inflicting physical pain. The word JaLDa does not mean a stick, but something that will touch the skin, since the word jalda is a derivative of a word that is used for skin (JeLD). Shaming is a social and psychological penalty. For such a penalty to be effective, researchers suggest the fulfillment of the following conditions: (1) The convict must be a member of a particular group; (2) The group must approve of the penalty; (3) The shaming penalty should be delivered to the group and group should ignore the convict for a period physically, emotionally, and economically; (4) The convict who is wished to be shamed must fear the group's decision to cut the relation; and (5) The convict must have a means to regain the trust of the group. First we should be reminded that there is no stoning- to-death punishment for adultery in Islam. The punishment of stoning was introduced to the Islamic law long after prophet Muhammad through fabricated hadith. It is the followers of Sunni and Shiite sects that adopted the Jewish practice and fabricated the most ridiculous stories, such as the story of a hungry holy goat eating a verse about stoning, etc. The followers of hadith and sunna accept the Jewish practice and the related silly stories by claiming that "these verses are not clear about adultery; thus, hadith and sunna explain these verses." Knowing the excuse of those who associate other partners with God, the first two verses rebut the claim of the unappreciative people by asserting the clarity of its language. The origin of stoning is found in the Old Testament. For instance: "But if this thing be true, and the tokens of virginity be not found for the damsel: Then they shall bring out the damsel to the door of her father's house, and the men of her city shall stone her with stones that she die: because she hath wrought folly in Israel, to play the whore in her father's house: so shalt thou put evil away from among you." (Deuteronomy 22:20- 21) According to the Old Testament, a rapist should be forced to marry the girl he violated. This rule punishes the victim to share the rest of her life with the violent and shameless man who violated her (Deuteronomy 22:28-30). How can this and many other unjust laws be imposed by a Just God? (See 2:59; 2:79; 5:13-15; 5:41-44; 7:162; 9:31). See Leviticus 20:2,27; 24:14-16; Numbers 15:35; 35:17; Deuteronomy 13:10; 17:5; 22:21-25; Joshua 7:25; 1 Kings 21:1-29. Also, see the Quran: 3:36.

Edip-Layth - End Note 2 (24:4)

See 4:15.

Edip-Layth - End Note 3 (24:11)

By not mentioning the person's name in this historical event, the Quran wants to keep its universal application clear. See 111:1

Edip-Layth - End Note 4 (24:15)

We are instructed not to disseminate rumors or hearsay statements about a person without proof or strong evidence. This warning is about any person. But, what about not any person, but the prophet? What about collecting rumors and hearsay statements about a prophet long after he passed away? What about not only believing those rumors and hearsay statements, but also sanctifying them as a part of the religion for future generations? What about going even further by preferring them to a book believed to be the verbatim word of God? And what about even going further, and declaring those who reject them to be apostates, deserving to be killed? It is these "holy" rumors and hearsay statements that have condemned Muslim societies to ignorance, oppression, and backwardness. Those who consider hadith and sunna, which would not be admitted in any court of law, as an important source of their religion, have no respect to God and his messengers; since they follow conjecture and contradictory hearsay reports (6:116). See 6:148; 10:36,66; 53:28.

Edip-Layth - End Note 5 (24:30)

Righteous men and women should not dress provocatively. A woman should lower her dress (33:59) and cover her chest. God uses flexible language, to allow culture, time, climate, age, and social dynamics and other variables play a role in the decision. The underlying reason for this recommendation is expressed as protection of women from potential male harassment. There is nothing in the Quran that instructs the government or the society to force women, in the name of God, to cover themselves. A punishment neither in this world nor in hereafter is issued. While the male clerics and the followers of their misogynistic teachings are sunk up to their eyebrows in the mud of shirk, the only unforgivable sin, somehow they scrupulously split the hair of women. Does sanctifying the dress code of Christian nuns have anything to do with their psychological and sexual problems? The verses recommending women to cover themselves aim to protect them from the harassment of unrighteous men. Ironically, women are now harassed more by the self-righteous men. It is up to women, not men, how long they will lower their dress, whether they will cover their breasts or not. It is a different thing to remind a monotheist woman nicely to wear modestly for her protection and perhaps for social order. But, using this issue to patronize and subjugate women is not what the Quran expects from us. Even worse than this, is to impose this recommendation onto those women who are not muslims, since that violates many more Quranic principles. The male clerics who covered their intelligence by their obsessive interference with women's hair and dress, do not even notice the lesson in verse 7:26. Despite the verse informing us that women were walking in the street with their faces open in front of Muhammad (33:52), they still have the audacity to preach to women to cover their faces with veils. See 33:55. For the Biblical account of women's dress, which is mostly ignored by Christians, see Genesis 24:65; Jeremiah 4:30; Ezekiel 16:10; Zephaniah 1:8 ; 1Timothy 2:9; 1 Peter 3:3; 1Corintions 11:15.

Edip-Layth - End Note (24:31)

Edip-Layth - End Note 6 (24:32)

The reference pronoun of the word "IBaDukum" is misunderstood, and contrary to the clear verses of the Quran, it is abused for the justification of slavery. The expression "your slaves" should be understood as "slaves among you" or "slaves from your group" not as "the slaves that you own." For instance, the expression "feed your poor" does not mean "poor that you own." (See 4:3)

Edip-Layth - End Note 7 (24:33)

What about if they don't want to be chaste, then should they be forced? Of course not. For instance, "Don't force your children to eat meat, if they chose to be vegetarians" does not mean "Force your children to eat meat if they don't want to be vegetarians." The word FaTaYa has been usually mistranslated as slaves. For its meaning through its Quranic usages please see: 12:30; 12:36; 18:10; 18:60; 21:60; and 24:33.

Edip-Layth - End Note 8 (24:35)

This example highlights some of the main characteristics of the Quran. God is the source of enlightenment (light). The Quran radiates God's message (lamp). Though it is protected with a mathematical code, it has a transparent language (glass), reflecting a small portion of divine knowledge (radiant planet). Its message is universal; not limited to any language, race, or geography (neither of the east nor of the west). Those with open eyes may get its message even without showing much effort (gives off light even if not touched by fire). It has meaning inside meaning, message inside message (light upon light). Receiving its message is a blessing and its teacher is God Himself (God guides whomever/whoever wish(es) to His light). The word nur (light), in the normative case, occurs 33 times and is never used in plural form in the Quran, while its antonym is always used in its plural form, zulumat (darknesses), in 23 occurrences, and never in singular form. This implies singularity of the source of truth, which is God, and diversity of the sources of falsehood, which could be Satan, polytheist clergymen, ignorance, peer pressure, wrong choices, acquired weaknesses and addictions, etc. According to the Bible, God created the light first (Genesis 1:3). Light is also used as a metaphor for divine enlightenment or instruction (Psalms 119:105; Isaiah 8:20; Matthew 4:16; Matthew 5:16; John 5:35). God is described as "the Father of lights" (James 1:17). The Bible and its appendices use the light metaphor for many creatures too, such as John the Baptist (John 5:35), Jesus (Luke 2:32; John 1:7-9), his disciples, (Matthew 5:14), and angels (2 Corinthians 11:14).

Edip-Layth - End Note 9 (24:45)

It is noteworthy that humans are included in the classification of living creatures according to physiological characteristics. This is in line with other verses that indicate an evolutionary method in creating Adam's biological body. Millions of years ago, the ability of a mammalian to walk on two feet is considered a critical point in the evolution of the human brain and the creation of homo sapiens. Walking on two feet might seem like a simple orthopedic change but its effect on the neuropsychological transformation is huge. See 29:18-20; 41:9-10; 7:69; 15:26; 32:7-9; 71:14-17. Like the Quran, the Bible mentions water and ground as the main origin or ingredients of life (Genesis 1:20-21; 2:19).

Edip-Layth - End Note 10 (24:58)

The Quran provides sufficient details regarding how to perform sala prayer. See 11:114; 17:78; 38:32; 16:49. Taking short naps during midday is recommended since it improves people's performance in work substantially.

Edip-Layth - End Note 11 (24:61)

The Quran finds no problem in eating together but religious scholars who follow other sources besides the Quran, discourage intermingling of men and women. The Quran does not discriminate against handicapped people. The only criterion that makes a person above another person in the sight of God is righteousness (49:13). Compare this to the instruction inserted into the Old Testament at Leviticus 21:16-24, which deems handicapped or disfigured people spiritually inferior to healthy ones. Also, see 48:17.

Edip-Layth - End Note 12 (24:63)

This is a commonly mistranslated and abused verse. Muhammad was an elected leader of a multi-religious and multi-racial city-state, and the city was under constant military attack by neighboring polytheists. The verse is asking believers to take serious the invitation of the messenger to a public gathering for a consultation limited to the community of believers. However, those who idolize Muhammad take the verse out of its context and interpret it to mean we should mention Muhammad's name with ostentatious titles. See 33:56; 2:48.

Shabbir Ahmed -

Shabbir Ahmed - End Note 1 (24:2)

Jaldah (from skin) implies that the lashes must be superficial on the skin. And the presence of a group of believers clearly indicates the punishment as a means of deterrence and not torture. Nowhere does the Qur'an ordain the barbaric punishment of stoning to death anyone for any crime. Lewdness: 4:15, 25. Punishment as a deterrent: 5:38. Capital punishment for rape: 33:60:61

Shabbir Ahmed - End Note 2 (24:3)

Fornication and adultery are a form of idol worship for, such people submit to their desires. The word AW here is explanatory. AW = Or + That is + Namely + Call it + In other words. AW appears in this format instead of 'or' in many places in the Qur'an such as 23:6, 24:3, 25:62. Nikah, in the lexicon, applies to genuine wedlock as well as to sexual relations between a man and a woman outside wedlock, depending on the context. The very common rendering of this verse to the effect that an adulterer is allowed to marry only an adulteress or idolatress, and vice versa, is absolutely erroneous and contrary to the Big Picture of the Qur'an which lays great emphasis on reform and forgiveness. And it defies all sense. Whereas many translators have maintained that such men and women will end up marrying their like. This is obviously the result of not bearing in mind the meaning of AW and Nikah, and going against common sense. Finally, the Book of God does not downgrade people once they have repented or received penalty. Oh, yet another point! After painting an X-rated scenario of Madinah as if adultery/fornication was going on right and left and coming to public knowledge, in the very life-time of the exalted prophet, the Imams of the old come up with a horrible joke. They insult Hazrat Ali that he decreed for an adulterer to receive a hundred stripes to fulfill the command in the Qur'an, and then stoned him to death to fulfill the command of Hadith! The so-called Imams also contend that while an unmarried person will receive lashes, a married person must be condemned to death by stoning! Did they not prefer their own whims to the Word of God?

Dressing modestly, therefore, is a trait of the believing men and women. The minimum requirements for a woman's dress is to lengthen her garment (33:59) and to cover her chest. Tyrannical Arab traditions have given a false impression that a woman must be covered from head to toe; such is not a Quranic or Islamic dress.

Muhammad Asad - The Message Of Quran

Muhammad Asad - End Note 1 (25:1)

Almost all the commentators give this meaning to the term al-furqan. In the above context it denotes the Qur'an as well as the phenomenon of divine revelation as such. (For an amplified interpretation of this term by Muhammad Abduh see note 38 on 2:53.) The verbal form nazzala implies gradualness both in time ("successively") and in method ("step by step").

Muhammad Asad - End Note 2 (25:2)

See note 133 on 17:111.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 3 (25:2)

I.e., in accordance with the function assigned by Him to each individual thing or phenomenon: cf. the oldest formulation of this idea in 87:2-3.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 4 (25:3)

I.e., whether they be inanimate "representations" of imaginary deities, or personified forces of nature, or deified human beings, or simply figments of the imagination.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 5 (25:4)

Implying that the Qur'an, or most of it, is based on Judaeo-Christian teachings allegedly communicated to Muhammad by some unnamed foreigners (cf. 16:103 and the corresponding notes, especially note 130) or, alternatively, by various Arab converts to Judaism or Christianity; furthermore, that Muhammad had either deceived himself into believing that the Qur'an was a divine revelation, or had deliberately - knowing that it was not so - attributed it to God.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 6 (25:4)

Lit., "and thus, indeed, have they come with [or "brought"] a perversion of the truth" [which obviously is the meaning of zulm in this context] "and a falsehood". Whereas it is generally assumed that this clause constitutes a Quranic rebuttal of the malicious allegation expressed in the preceding clause, I am of the opinion that it forms part of that allegation, making the mythical "helpers" of Muhammad co-responsible, as it were, for the "invention" of the Qur'an.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 7 (25:5)

Because his contemporaries knew it that he was unlettered (ummi) and could not read and write.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 8 (25:8)

A sarcastic allusion to the "gardens of paradise" of which the Qur'an so often speaks. (Cf. 13:38 and the corresponding notes 74 and 75; also 5:75 and 21:7-8.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 9 (25:12)

Lit., "When it shall see them from a far-off place": a metaphorical allusion, it would seem, to the moment of their death on earth. As in many other instances, we are given here a subtle verbal hint of the allegorical nature of the Quranic descriptions of conditions in the life to come by a rhetorical "transfer" of man's faculty of seeing to the object of his seeing: a usage which Zamakhshari explicitly characterizes as metaphorical (ala sabil al-majaz).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 10 (25:13)

For a tentative explanation of the allegory of the sinners' being "linked together" in hell, see my note 64 on 14:49. As regards the "tight space" into which they will be flung, Zamakhshari remarks: "Distress is accompanied by [a feeling of] constriction, just as happiness is accompanied by [feeling of] spaciousness; and because of this, God has described paradise as being 'as vast as the heavens and the earth' [3:133]."

Muhammad Asad - End Note 11 (25:14)

Although the concept of "extinction" (thubur) implies finality and is, therefore, unrepeatable, the sinners' praying for "many extinctions" is used here as a metonym for their indescribable suffering and a corresponding, indescribable desire for a final escape.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 12 (25:17)

This passage connects elliptically with verse 3 above.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 13 (25:17)

The rhetorical "question" which follows is obviously addressed to wrongfully deified rational beings - i.e., prophets or saints - and not, as some commentators assume, to lifeless idols which, as it were, "will be made to speak".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 14 (25:18)

Sc., "and so it would have been morally impossible for us to ask others to worship us". On the other hand, Ibn Kathir understands the expression "for us" (lana) as denoting "us human beings" in general, and not merely the speakers - in which case the sentence could be rendered thus: "It is not right for us [human beings] to take", etc. In either case, the above allegorical "question-and-answer" - repeated in many variations throughout the Qur'an - is meant to stress, in a dramatic manner, the moral odiousness and intellectual futility of attributing divine qualities to any being other than God.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 15 (25:18)

This is the meaning of hatta (lit., "till" or "until") in the present context.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 16 (25:20)

This elliptic passage undoubtedly alludes to the fact that the appearance of each new prophet had, as a rule, a twofold purpose: firstly, to convey a divinely-inspired ethical message to man, and thus to establish a criterion of right and wrong or a standard by which to discern the true from the false al-furqan, as stated in the first verse of this surah; and, secondly, to be a means of testing men's moral perceptions and dispositions as manifested in their reactions to the prophets message - that is, their willingness or unwillingness to accept it on the basis of its intrinsic merit, without demanding or even expecting any "supernatural" proof of its divine origin. Indirectly, in its deepest sense, this passage implies that not only a prophet but every human being is, by virtue of his social existence, a means whereby the moral qualities of his fellow-men are put to a test: hence, some of the earliest commentators (among them, Tabari) give to the above phrase the connotation of "We caused you human beings to be a means of testing one another".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 17 (25:20)

I.e., "you men" or, more specifically, "you whom the message of the Qur'an has reached".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 18 (25:21)

lit., "who do not hope for [i.e., expect] a meeting with Us": the implication being that they do not believe in resurrection and consequently, do not expect to be judged by God in after-life.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 19 (25:22)

I.e., on judgment Day, when "all will have been decided" (cf. 6:8).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 20 (25:24)

Lit., "will be happiest as regards their abode, and best as regards their place of repose".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 21 (25:27)

[Lit., "taken a path with the apostle". The terms "the apostle" and "the evildoer" are here obviously used in their generic sense, applying to all of God's apostles and all who consciously reject their guidance. Similarly, the expression "so-and-so" (fulan) occurring in the next verse circumscribes any person or personified influence responsible for leading a human being astray.

Muhammad Asad - End Note (25:29)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 23 (25:30)

My interpolation of the words "on that Day" and the (linguistically permissible) attribution of futurity to the past-tense verb qala is based on the identical interpretation of the above phrase by great commentators like Abu Muslim (as quoted by Razi) or Baghawi.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 24 (25:30)

I.e., as mere wishful thinking and, therefore, of no account, or as something that in the course of time has "ceased to be relevant". Since many of those whom the message of the Qur'an has reached did and do regard it as a divine revelation and therefore as most "relevant" in every sense of the word, it is obvious that the expression "my people" cannot possibly denote here all of the Prophet's community (either in the national or in the ideological sense of this word), but signifies only such of his nominal followers as have lost all real faith in the Quranic message: hence the necessity of interpolating the (elliptically implied) words "some of" before "my people".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 25 (25:31)

Cf. 6:112, which refers in very similar terms to the evil forces (shayatin) against which every prophet has had to contend. The "glittering half-truths meant to delude the mind" spoken of in that verse are exemplified in the present passage, prophetically, by the deceptive argument that the Qur'an, having been enunciated fourteen centuries ago, must now be considered "obsolete".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 26 (25:32)

Lit., "in one piece" or "as one statement" (jumlatan wahidatan) - implying, in the view of the opponents of Islam, that the gradual, step-by-step revelation of the Qur'an points to its having been "composed" by Muhammad to suit his changing personal and political requirements.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 27 (25:32)

I.e. free of all inner contradictions (cf. 4:82). See also 39:23, where the Qur'an is spoken of as "fully consistent within itself". The concise phrase rattalnahu tartilan comprises the parallel concepts of "putting the component parts [of a thing] together and arranging them well" as well as "endowing it with inner consistency". Inasmuch as full consistency and freedom from contradictions in a message spread over twenty-three years of a life as full of movement and drama as that of the Prophet does give a clear indication of its God-inspired quality, it is bound to strengthen the faith of every thinking believer: and herein lies, according to the Qur'an itself, the deepest reason for its slow, gradual revelation. (When applied to the reciting of the Qur'an - as in 73:4 - the term tartil refers to the measured diction and the thoughtful manner in which it ought to be enunciated.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 28 (25:33)

Lit., "come to thee with a parable (mathal)" - i.e., with all manner of seemingly plausible parabolic objections (exemplified in verses 7-8, 21 and 32 of this surah as well as in many other places in the Qur'an) meant to throw doubt on Muhammad's claim to prophethood and, hence, on the God-inspired character of the Quranic message.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 29 (25:33)

Sc., "of the problem or problems involved": an allusion to the self-explanatory character of the Qur'an. Throughout this section (verses 30-34) the personal pronoun "thou" (in the forms "thy" and "thee") relates not only to the Prophet but also to every one of his followers at all times.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 30 (25:34)

I.e., in utter spiritual abasement (Razi, mentioning some other commentators as well).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 31 (25:34)

Cf. 17:72 and the corresponding note 87.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 32 (25:35)

For this rendering of the term wazir, see note 18 on 20:29. The mention, at this place, of Moses and Aaron - and of Noah, etc., in the following verses - is intended to remind us of the statement in verse 31 above that "against every prophet We have set up enemies from among those who are lost in sin".

Muhammad Asad - End Note (25:38)

Muhammad Asad - End Note (25:39)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 34 (25:40)

Sc., "which they failed to heed". For my rendering of mathal, in this context, as "lesson", see note 104 on 7:89.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 35 (25:40)

A reference to Sodom and its destruction by a rain of "stone-hard blows of chastisement pre-ordained" (see 11:82 and the corresponding note 114). The phrase "they have come across" may be understood in either of two ways: (a) in its literal sense of chancing upon" or "passing by", in which case it applies to the Prophet's contemporaries and opponents, the pagan Meccans, whose customary caravan route to Syria passed close by the Dead Sea and the probable site of Sodom and Gomorrah; or (b) in the tropical sense of "becoming aware [of something]" through reading or hearsay - in which case it may be taken to refer to people of all times, and to the fact that the story of Sodom and Gomorrah is part and parcel of mankind's moral heritage.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 37 (25:44)

Lit., "they are farther astray from the path [of truth]": see note 144 on 7:179.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 38 (25:46)

I.e., "We cause it to contract in accordance with the 'laws of nature' which We Ourselves have instituted." As in so many other instances in the Qur'an, the abrupt change from the third-person pronoun "He" to "We" is meant to illustrate the fact that God is indefinable, and that it is only the inadequacy of human speech - and, hence, of the human mind - that makes it necessary to refer to the Supreme Being by pronouns which in reality are applicable only to finite, created persons". (cf. Forward, note 2).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 39 (25:50)

Lit., "have We turned it over (sarrafnahu) among them": a reference to the frequent, many-faceted reiteration, in the Qur'an as well as in earlier revelations, of all the evidence unmistakably pointing to the existence of a conscious Creator (Zamakhshari.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 40 (25:51)

Sc., "but We have willed instead that Muhammad be Our last prophet and, hence, a warner unto all people for all times to come".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 41 (25:53)

The noun bahr, usually signifying "sea", is also applied to large agglomerations of sweet water, like rivers, lakes, etc.; in the above context, the dual al-bahrayn denotes "the two great bodies [or "kinds"] of water" - the salty and the sweet - existing side by side on earth.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 42 (25:53)

I.e., has caused them - as if by an invisible barrier - to remain distinct in kind despite their continuous meeting and mingling in the oceans: an indirect reminder of God's planning creative ness inherent in the cyclic transformation of water - its evaporation from the salty seas, followed by a formation of clouds, their condensation into rain and snow which feed springs and rivers, and its return to the seas. Some Muslim mystics see in this stress on the two kinds of water an allegory of the gulf - and, at the same time, interaction - between man's spiritual perceptions, on the one hand, and his worldly needs and passions, on the other.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 43 (25:54)

See second half of 21:30 where the creation of "every living thing out of water" is spoken of, as well as 24:45, which mentions in this connection the entire animal world (including, of course, man).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 44 (25:54)

I.e., has enabled him to attribute spiritual value to, and to derive strength from, his organic and social relationships.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 45 (25:55)

lit., "they".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 47 (25:59)

I.e., "ask God Himself": since He alone holds the keys to the mysteries of the universe, it is only by observing His creation and listening to His revealed messages that man can obtain a glimpse, however distant, of God's Own reality.

Muhammad Asad - End Note (25:59)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 48 (25:61)

See 10:5, where the sun is spoken of as "a [source of] radiant light", explained in the corresponding note. For my rendering of buruj as "great constellations", see note 15 on 15:16.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 49 (25:62)

Lit., "or" (aw) - a particle which obviously does not denote here an alternative but, rather, an explanatory amplification, similar to the expression "in other words".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 50 (25:63)

Sc., "with the aim to ridicule them or to argue against their beliefs".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 51 (25:67)

In the Qur'an, the verb anfaqa (and the corresponding noun nafaqah) has usually this connotation.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 52 (25:68)

See surah 6 and note 148.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 53 (25:68)

Lit., "he who does that (dhalika)", i.e., any of the three sins referred to in this verse. (For my translation of zina as "adultery", see surah 24 note 2.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 54 (25:72)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 55 (25:73)

Explaining this verse, Zamakhshari remarks that whereas the average run of people approach the divine writ with a mere outward show of eagerness, "throwing themselves upon it" for the sake of appearances but, in reality, not making the least attempt to understand the message as such and, hence, remaining deaf and blind to its contents - the truly God-conscious are deeply desirous of understanding it, and therefore "listen to it with wide-awake ears and look into it with seeing eyes.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 58 (25:77)

I.e., unless you repent, this sin will determine your spiritual destiny in the life to come".

Edip-Layth - Quran: A Reformist Translation

Edip-Layth - End Note 1 (25:2)

The planet earth is a self-contained spaceship and each of us astronauts were beamed down here into the bodies with our memories erased. Everything we need for life: food, water, and oxygen is provided for us. We are also provided with hundreds of elements to tinker with, underground fossils to use, and we are rewarded with technological candies each time we learn a letter or sentence from the book of nature. Everything is interconnected with a complex network according to a well calculated plan.

Edip-Layth - End Note 2 (25:3)

The majority of humans on earth, carve idols from dead prophets, saints, cult leaders, historical heroes, and founding fathers. The living leaders of polytheistic societies gain more power and authority by exploiting the exaggerated power of dead idols that are monopolized and used as the trademark of a particular ruling class. Turning the tombs or relics of dead idols into shrines or memorials are characteristics of polytheistic societies. Around the names of common idols, certain doctrines and practices are baptized and transformed into religious or political dogmas, thereby turning them into taboos. This might provide short-term security, unity and tranquility in the society, but in the long run, when circumstances change and old realities are replaced with new realities, the society that has turned fallible humans, institutions, and teachings into absolute facts, start having problems with the new realities. The tension between new and old, between religion and science, between reality and fiction, between the pragmatic and symbolic, occasionally may lead to a clash and revolution.

Edip-Layth - End Note 3 (25:5)

Contemporaries of Muhammad knew that Muhammad was a literate person. Prophet Muhammad wrote God's message with his own hand. Also, see 7:157-158; 2:78; 3:20.

Edip-Layth - End Note 4 (25:6)

The answer contains a secret or a hidden word, an implication of the hidden code of the mathematical structure, which was unveiled in 1974, that is, 1406 lunar years after the revelation of the Quran. See 74:1-56.

Edip-Layth - End Note 5 (25:30)

Soon after Muhammad's death, hypocrites and those who reverted to polytheism engaged in the oral transmission of hearsay, thereby creating another source besides the Quran. Centuries later, they were collected, written and codified as the teachings of various sects. Those who follow these hearsays and fabrications pretend to follow Muhammad, while they abandon the only book delivered by him. They will be surprised on the Day of Judgment to see that Muhammad will reject their fabrications and idolatry, by following the rules expressed in 78:38 and 19:87. Muhammad will intercede for them by fulfilling the prophecy in verse 25:30.

Edip-Layth - End Note 6 (25:31)

For the identity of the ardent enemies of the messenger, see 6:112-116.

Edip-Layth - End Note 7 (25:47)

Sleep is as essential as drinking water and consuming food. Sleep deprivation reduces mental and bodily functions and after a certain point, the brain crashes. After 24 waking hours, the brain's ability to use glucose goes down dramatically. The purpose and meaning of sleep and dreaming is still the subject of scientific debate and research. There are many theories regarding why we sleep. Some researchers believe that we sleep and dream for rest, or for the brain to restore and rejuvenate itself. Others claim that sleep and dreams allow the brain to perform a series of repeated cycles of pruning and strengthening of neural connections that enable the person to learn new information without forgetting old information. Some claim that the brain needs downtime to detoxify itself from free radicals generated by our metabolism. Perhaps, sleep allows the brain to organize the accumulated data, sort them, place them in their proper memory folders, and then associate them with little tags for easy retrieval. The brain is like a busy office where the secretary cannot keep up with processing the numerous documents, faxes, and boxes that are sent and received during daytime. The clutter caused by this high traffic rate reduces the performance in the office, and during the night shift, another work starts to sift, clean and organize the office. Similarly, our brains need such a cleaning and organization period. Dreams perhaps happen when new files are organized and associated, folders are filled, and unused data are discarded. See 2:255; 8:43; 12:6; 30:23; 39:42; 78:9; 37:102.

Could this barrier be evaporation? The water of lakes is maintained by rain. Through evaporation, the salty ocean water is filtered from its minerals. Evaporation creates a physical barrier between salty water and drinkable water.

Edip-Layth	26:189 But they denied him, so the retribution of the day of shadow took them. It was the retribution of a terrible day.
The Monotheist Group	26:189 But they denied him, so the retribution of the day of shadow took them. It was the retribution of a terrible day.
Muhammad Asad	26:189 But they gave him the lie. And thereupon suffering overtook them on a day dark with shadows: ⁷⁸ and, verily, it was the suffering of an awesome day!
Rashad Khalifa	26:189 They disbelieved him and, consequently, they incurred the retribution of the Day of the Canopy. It was the retribution of an awesome day.

Shabbir Ahmed	26:189 But they persisted in denial. Then the Day of overshadowing gloom seized them. It was the suffering of an awesome day. (Historically, a dark extensive cloud rained upon them heavily and incessantly. It is sometimes referred to as the Day of the Canopy).

Edip-Layth	26:190 In that is a sign, but most of them are not those who acknowledge.
The Monotheist Group	26:190 In that is a sign, but most of them are not believers.
Muhammad Asad	26:190 In this [story], behold, there is a message [unto men], even though most of them will not believe [in it].
Rashad Khalifa	26:190 This should be a lesson, but most people are not believers.
Shabbir Ahmed	26:190 Herein, is a sign, and most of them were not believers (in the Law of Requit).
Transliteration	26:190 Inna fee thalika laayatan wamakana aktharuhum mu/mineena
A	26:190 ان في ذلك لآية وما كان اكثرهم مومنين
Edip-Layth	26:191 Your Lord is the Noble, the Compassionate.
The Monotheist Group	26:191 And your Lord is the Noble, the Merciful.
Muhammad Asad	26:191 But, verily, thy Sustainer - He alone - is almighty, a dispenser of grace! 79
Rashad Khalifa	26:191 Most assuredly, your Lord is the Almighty, Most Merciful.
Shabbir Ahmed	26:191 Your Lord! He is Almighty, Merciful.

Edip-Layth	The Quran 26:192 This is a revelation from the Lord of the worlds.
The Monotheist Group	26:192 And this is a revelation from the Lord of the worlds.
Muhammad Asad	26:192 Now, behold, this [divine writ] has indeed been bestowed from on high by the Sustainer of all the worlds:
Rashad Khalifa	The Quran 26:192 This is a revelation from the Lord of the universe.
Shabbir Ahmed	26:192 Certainly, this Qur'an is the revelation from the Lord of the worlds.
Transliteration	26:192 Wa-innahu latanzeelu rabbi alAAalameena

Edip-Layth	26:194 Upon your heart, so that you would be of the warners.
The Monotheist Group	26:194 Upon your heart, so that you would be of the warners.
Muhammad Asad	26:194 upon thy heart, [O Muhammad] 81 so that thou mayest be among those who preach
Rashad Khalifa	26:194 To reveal it into your heart, that you may be one of the warners.
Shabbir Ahmed	26:194 Upon your heart (O Prophet!), so that you may be of the warners.

Edip-Layth	26:196 It is in the Psalms of old.
The Monotheist Group	26:196 And it is in the scriptures of old.
Muhammad Asad	26:196 And, verily, [the essence of] this [revelation] is indeed found in the ancient books of divine wisdom [as well]. 83
Rashad Khalifa	26:196 It has been prophesied in the books of previous generations.
Shabbir Ahmed	26:196 And certainly, it (the Qur'an) has been announced in the previous scriptures.
Transliteration	26:196 Wa-innahu lafee zuburi al-awwaleena

Edip-Layth	26:199 He related it to them; they would not have acknowledged it.
The Monotheist Group	26:199 And he related it to them, they would not have believed in it.
Muhammad Asad	26:199 and had he recited it unto them [in his own tongue], they would not have believed in it. ⁸⁶
Rashad Khalifa	26:199 And had him recite it (in Arabic), they could not possibly believe in it.
Shabbir Ahmed	26:199 And had he read it to them, they would have had reason to disbelieve it.
Transliteration	26:199 Faqaraahu AAalayhim m a ka no obihi mu/mineena

Edip-Layth	26:200 As such, We diverted it from the hearts of the criminals.
The Monotheist Group	26:200 As such, We diverted it from the hearts of the criminals.
Muhammad Asad	26:200 Thus have We caused this [message] to pass [unheeded] through the hearts of those who are lost in sin: ⁸⁷
Rashad Khalifa	26:200 We thus render it (like a foreign language) in the hearts of the guilty.
Shabbir Ahmed	26:200 But to the guilty people, it just passes through their hearts (as a foreign tongue even though they might be Arabs). ²⁷
Transliteration	26:200 Kath al ika salak na hu feequloobi almujrimeena

Edip-Layth	26:201 They do not acknowledge it until they see the painful retribution.
The Monotheist Group	26:201 They do not believe in it until they see the painful retribution.

Muhammad Asad	26:201 they will not believe in it till they behold the grievous suffering
Rashad Khalifa	26:201 Thus, they cannot believe in it; not until they see the painful retribution.
Shabbir Ahmed	26:201 They will not believe in it until they suffer the dire consequences.
Transliteration	26:201 La yu/minoona bihi hattayarawoo alAAathaba al-aleema

Edip-Layth	26:202 So it will come to them suddenly, while they do not perceive it.
The Monotheist Group	26:202 So it will come to them suddenly, while they do not perceive it.
Muhammad Asad	26:202 that will come upon them [on resurrection,] all of a sudden, without their being aware [of its approach];
Rashad Khalifa	26:202 It will come to them suddenly, when they least expect it.
Shabbir Ahmed	26:202 The requital will come upon them suddenly, when they least expect it.

Edip-Layth	26:203 Then they would say, "Can we be given more time?"
The Monotheist Group	26:203 Then they would say: "Can we be given more time?"
Muhammad Asad	26:203 and then they will exclaim, Could we have a respite?" 88
Rashad Khalifa	26:203 They will then say, "Can we have a respite?"
Shabbir Ahmed	26:203 Then they will say, "Could we have a respite?"
Transliteration	26:203 Fayaqooloo hal na_hnu muntharoona

Edip-Layth	26:204 Was it not their wish that Our punishment be hastened?
The Monotheist Group	26:204 Was it not their wish that Our punishment be hastened?
Muhammad Asad	26:204 Do they, then, [really] wish that Our chastisement be hastened on? 89
Rashad Khalifa	26:204 Did they not challenge our retribution?
Shabbir Ahmed	26:204 Do they wish that Our requital come to them quickly?

Edip-Layth	26:205 Do you see that if We gave them luxury for years.
The Monotheist Group	26:205 Do you see that if We gave them luxury for years.
Muhammad Asad	26:205 But hast thou ever considered [this]: If We do allow them to enjoy [this life] for some years,
Rashad Khalifa	26:205 As you see, we allowed them to enjoy for years.

Shabbir Ahmed	26:205 As you see, Our Law of Respite allows them to enjoy Our bounties for years.

The Monotheist Group	26:213 So do not call upon any other god with God, else you will be with those punished.
Muhammad Asad	26:213 Hence, [O man,] do not invoke any other deity side by side with God, lest thou find thyself among those who are made to suffer [on Judgment Day]. ⁹²
Rashad Khalifa	26:213 Therefore, do not idolize beside GOD any other god, lest you incur the retribution.
	26:213 So, do not invoke any other god with God, or you will be among those

Shabbir Ahmed	who are made to suffer.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 4 (26:4)

Inasmuch as the spiritual value of man's faith depends on its being an outcome of free choice and not of compulsion, the visible or audible appearance of a "message from the skies" would, by its very obviousness, nullify the element of free choice and, therefore, deprive man's faith in that message of all its moral significance.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 5 (26:6)

See 6:4-5 and the corresponding note 4.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 6 (26:9)

The above two verses appear eight times, in this surah. Apart from the present instance, they conclude, like a refrain, each of the subsequent seven stories of earlier prophets, which by means of their, in places, almost identical phrasing - are meant to stress the essential identity of the ethical teachings of all the prophets, as well as to illustrate the statement, in verse 5, that a rejection of God's messages is a recurrent phenomenon in the history of mankind despite the fact that His existence is clearly manifested in all living creation.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 7 (26:11)

Lit., "Will they not be [or "become"] conscious (of me)?" Zamakhshari and Razi understand this rhetorical question in the sense apparent in my rendering, namely, as a statement of fact.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 8 (26:13)

Cf. 20:25-34 and the corresponding notes. In the present context, stress is laid on the deep humility of Moses, who considered himself incapable of fulfilling the task for which he had been chosen, and asked God to entrust it to Aaron instead.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 9 (26:14)

Sc., "and thus frustrate my mission". This is a reference to Moses killing of the Egyptian, which was the cause of his subsequent flight from his native land (cf. 28:15 ff.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 10 (26:19)

lit., "thou didst commit thy deed which thou hast committed" - a construction meant to express the speaker's utter condemnation of the deed referred to: hence, my interpolation of the word "heinous". As regards the above allusions to Moses' childhood and youth at Pharaoh's court, the manslaughter committed by him, and his flight from Egypt, see 28:4-22.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 11 (26:21)

In the religion of ancient Egypt, the king (or "Pharaoh", as each of the rulers was styled) represented an incarnation of the divine principle, and was considered to be a god in his own right. Hence, a challenge to his divinity implied a challenge to the prevalent religious system as a whole.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 30 (26:56)

Thus the Qur'an illustrates the psychological truth that, as a rule, a dominant nation is unable really to understand the desire for liberty on the part of the group or groups which it oppresses and therefore attributes their rebelliousness to no more than unreasonable hatred and blind envy of the strong.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 31 (26:58)

This is apparently an allusion to the honourable state and the prosperity which the children of Israel had enjoyed in Egypt for a few generations after the time of Joseph - i.e., before a new Egyptian dynasty dispossessed them of their wealth and reduced them to the bondage from which Moses was to free them. In the above passage, Pharaoh seeks to justify his persecution of the Israelites by emphasizing their dislike (real or alleged) of the Egyptians.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 32 (26:59)

This parenthetical sentence echoes the allusion in 7:137, to the period of prosperity and honour, which the children of Israel were to enjoy in Palestine after their sufferings in Egypt. The reference to "heritage" is, in this and in similar contexts, a metonym for God's bestowal on the oppressed of a life of well being and dignity.

From various indications in the Bible (in particular Exodus xiv, 2 and 9), it appears that the miracle of the crossing of the Red Sea took place at the northwestern extremity of what is known today as the Gulf of Suez. In those ancient times it was not as deep as it is now, and in some respects may have resembled the shallow part of the North Sea between the mainland and the Frisian Islands, with its total ebbs which lay bare the sandbanks and make them temporarily passable, followed by sudden, violent tides which submerge them entirely.

The particle bal at the beginning of the sentence expresses astonishment. Thus, evading a direct answer to Abraham's criticism of idol-worship, his people merely stress its antiquity, forgetting - as Zamakhshari points out - that "ancient usage and precedence in time are no proof of [a concept] soundness". Razi, for his part, states that the above verse represents "one of the strongest [Quranic] indications of the immorality (fasad) inherent in [the principle of] taqlid", i.e., the blind, unquestioning adoption of religious concepts or practices on the basis of ones uncritical faith in no more than the "authority" of a scholar or religious leader.

This is obviously a retort to the unbeliever's suggestion (elliptically implied here) that those "abject" followers of Noah had declared their faith in him, not out of conviction, but only in order to gain some material advantages. Noah's answer embodies a cardinal principle of Quranic ethics and, hence, of Islamic law: No human being has the right to sit in judgment on another person's faith or hidden motives, whereas God knows what is in the hearts of men, society may judge only by external evidence (az-zahir), which comprises a person's words as well as deeds. Thus if anyone says, "I am a believer", and does not act or speak in a manner contradicting his professed faith, the community must consider him a believer.

The noun ayah, which primarily denotes "a sign" or "a token", evidently refers here to the ancient Semitic custom of worshipping the tribal gods on hilltops, which were crowned to this end by sacrificial altars or monuments, each of them devoted to a particular deity: hence my rendering of ayah, in this particular context, as "altars" (in the plural).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 57 (26:129)

The meaning could be either "hoping that you might live in them forever", or "that you might gain immortal renown for having built them".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 58 (26:130)

The term jabbar, when applied to man, as a rule denotes one who is haughty, overbearing, exorbitant and cruel, and does not submit to any moral restraints in his dealings with those who are weaker than himself. Sometimes (as, e.g., in 11:59 or 14:15) this term is used to describe a person's negative ethical attitude, and in that case it may be rendered as "enemy of the truth". In the present instance, however, stress is laid on the tyrannical behaviour of the tribe of Ad, evidently relating to their warlike conflicts with other people: and in this sense it expresses a Quranic prohibition, valid for all times, of all unnecessary cruelty in warfare, coupled with the positive, clearly-implied injunction to subordinate every act of war - as well as the decision to wage war as such - to moral considerations and restraints.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 59 (26:132)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 61 (26:139)

The message referred to here is contained in verses 128-130, which point out the three cardinal sins resulting from man's inordinate striving for power: worship of anything apart from God, self-admiring search for "glory", and cruelty or harshness towards one's fellow-men.

With this refrain ends the cycle of seven stories showing that spiritual truth in all its manifestations - whether it relates to an intellectual realization of God's existence to a refusal to regard power, wealth or fame as real values, or to the virtues of compassion and kindness towards all that lives on earth - has at all times been unacceptable to the overwhelming majority of mankind, and has always been submerged under the average man's blindness and deafness of heart. The very repetition of phrases, sentences and situations in all of the above stories - or, rather, in the above versions of these oft-narrated stories - tends to bring home to us the fact that the human situation as such never really changes, and that, in consequence, those who preach the truth must always struggle against human greed, power-hunger and proneness to self-adulation.

Muhammad Asad - End Note (26:192)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 81 (26:194)

According to almost all the classical commentators, the expression ar-ruh al-amin (lit., "the faithful [or "trustworthy"] spirit") is a designation of Gabriel, the Angel of Revelation, who, by virtue of his purely spiritual, functional nature, is incapable of sinning and cannot therefore, be other than utterly faithful to the trust reposed in him by God (cf. 16:50). On the other hand, since the term ruh is often used in the Qur'an in the sense of "divine inspiration" (see surah 2 note 71, and surah 16 note 2), it may have this latter meaning in the above context as well, especially in view of the statement that it had "alighted from on high upon the head" of the Prophet.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 82 (26:195)

See 14:4 - "never have We sent forth any apostle otherwise than (with a message) in his own people's tongue" and the corresponding note 3. "That the message of the Qur'an is, nevertheless, universal has been stressed in many of its verses (e.g., in 7:158 or 25:1). The other prophets mentioned in the Qur'an who "preached in the Arabic tongue" were Ishmael, Hud, Salih and Shu'ayb, all of them Arabians. In addition, if we bear in mind that Hebrew and Aramaic are but ancient Arabic dialects, all the Hebrew prophets may be included among "those who preached in the Arabic tongue".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 83 (26:196)

Lit., "in the scriptures (zubur, sing. zabur) of the ancients" (see surah 21 note 101). This interpretation of the above verse - advanced among others by Zamakhshari and Baydawi (and, according to the former, attributed to Imam Abu Hanifah as well) - is in full consonance with the oft-repeated Quranic doctrine that the basic teachings revealed to Muhammad are in their purport (ma'ani) identical with those preached by the earlier prophets. Another, more popular interpretation is, "this [Qur'an] has been mentioned [or "foretold"] in the earlier scriptures" (see in this connection note 33 on 2:42 and - with particular reference to a prediction made by Jesus - note 6 on 61:6.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 84 (26:197)

Ka'b al-Ahbar the Yemenite and a number of his compatriots during the reign of Umar, and countless others throughout the world who embraced Islam in the course of centuries. The reason why only learned Jews and not learned Christians as well are spoken of in this context lies in the fact that - contrary to the Torah, which still exists, albeit in a corrupted form - the original revelation granted to Jesus has been lost (see surah 3 note 4) and cannot, therefore, be cited in evidence of the basic identity of his teachings with those of the Qur'an.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 86 (26:199)

As the Qur'an points out in many places, most of the Meccan contemporaries of Muhammad refused in the beginning to believe in his prophethood on the ground that God could not have entrusted "a man from among themselves" with His message and this in spite of the fact that the Qur'an was expressed

"in the clear Arabic tongue", which they could fully understand: but (so the argument goes) if the Prophet had been a foreigner, and his message expressed in a non-Arabic tongue, they would have been even less prepared to accept it - for then they would have had the legitimate excuse that they were unable to understand it (cf. 41:44).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 87 (26:200)

During the early years of his prophetic mission, some of Muhammad's Meccan opponents tried to explain the rhetorical beauty and persuasiveness of the Qur'an by insinuating that he was a soothsayer (kahin) in communion with all manner of dark forces and evil spirits (shayatin).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 92 (26:213)

The conjunctive particle fa at the beginning of this sentence (rendered here as "hence") evidently connects with verse 208 above. As shown in note 94 below, the whole of the present passage is addressed to man in general.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 93 (26:214)

A believer is morally obliged to preach the truth to all whom he can reach, but obviously he must begin with those who are nearest to him, and especially those who recognize his authority.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 94 (26:215)

For an explanation of the metaphorical expression "lower thy wing" - rendered by me as "spread the wings of thy tenderness" - see 17:24 and the corresponding note 28. The phrase "all of the believers who follow thee" shows that (contrary to the assumption of most of the commentators) the above passage is not addressed to the Prophet - since all who believe in him are, by definition, his followers and vice versa - but to everyone who chooses to be guided by the Qur'an, and who is herewith called upon to extend his loving kindness and care to all believers who may "follow" him i.e., who may regard him as spiritually or intellectually superior or more experienced. This interpretation also explains verse 213 above: for whereas the exhortation contained in that verse is meaningful with regard to all who may listen to or read the Qur'an, it would be meaningless with reference to its Prophet, for whom the principle of God's oneness and uniqueness was the unquestionable beginning and end of all truth.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 95 (26:218)

According to Mujahid (as quoted by Tabari, this means "wherever thou mayest be". Other commentators take it to mean "when thou standest up for prayer", but this seems to be too narrow an interpretation.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 96 (26:219)

I.e., among the believers, as contrasted with those who "disobey thee" (see verse 216 above).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 97 (26:222)

The term affak, which literally denotes "a great [or "habitual"] liar", has here the meaning of "one who lies to himself": this is brought out in the next verse, which stresses the psychological fact that most of such self-deceivers readily lie to others as well.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 98 (26:223)

Lit., "most of them are lying".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 99 (26:224)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 100 (26:225)

The idiomatic phrase hama fi widyan (lit., "he wandered or "roamed") through valleys") is used, as most of the commentators point out, to describe a confused or aimless - and often self-contradictory - play with words and thoughts. In this context it is meant to stress the difference between the precision of the Qur'an, which is free from all inner contradictions (cf. note 97 on 4:82), and the vagueness often inherent in poetry.

A'maal Saaleh = Actions that create balance in the society = Acts that remove deficiencies = Helping others = Increasing individual and societal potential. Wantasaroo = They support their just cause = Defend themselves = Stand up for their rights = They help create a just social order with no room for oppression

Rashad Khalifa - End Note 2 (26:210)

A false messenger is a messenger of Satan, for he is the fabricator of the most horrendous lie. Such a messenger can never denounce idolatry, or preach the worship of God ALONE.

Rashad Khalifa - End Note 3 (26:214)

These verses refer to God's Messenger of the Covenant: the sum of the gematrical value of "Rashad Khalifa" (1230), plus the verse number (214) is $1230 + 214 = 1444 = 19 \times 76 = 19 \times 19 \times 4$, and the sum of the verse numbers from 214 through 223 is $2185 = 19 \times 115$ (Appendix1).

Muhammad Asad	27:18 till, when they came upon a valley [full] of ants, an ant exclaimed: O you ants! Get into your dwellings, lest Solomon and his hosts crush you without [even] being aware [of you]!"
Rashad Khalifa	27:18 When they approached the valley of the ants, one ant said, "O you ants, go into your homes, lest you get crushed by Solomon and his soldiers, without perceiving."

Shabbir Ahmed	27:18 Once (when Solomon was on an expedition), they came upon the valley ruled by An-Naml. The Queen, (realizing the power of Solomon), ordered her armies, "Go back in your barracks, lest Solomon and his armies crush you without knowing that we are a peaceful tribe."

Edip-Layth - Quran: A Reformist Translation

Edip-Layth - End Note 1 (27:1)

T9S60. This combination of letters/numbers plays an important role in the mathematical system of the Quran based on code 19. See 74:1-56; 1:1; 2:1; 13:38; 27:82; 38:1-8; 40:28-38; 46:10; 72:28.

Edip-Layth - End Note 2 (27:18)

Solomon's demonstration of miracles makes sense within the context of the Quran, but how can we explain the ants' recognition of Solomon and his troops and communicating this information with each other? Were ants also showing miracles?! Do all ants have such a secret talent? Did they recognize Solomon from the smell of his feet? 20:114.

Edip-Layth - End Note 3 (27:24)

For prostration, see 16:49.

Edip-Layth - End Note 4 (27:30)

The Basmalah in this verse, compensates the missing Basmalah from the beginning of chapter 9, exactly 19 chapters before. This extra Basmalah here, thus, completes the number of Basmalahs being 114 (19x6). See 1:1; 74:1-56.

Edip-Layth - End Note 5 (27:31)

Did Solomon violate the principle of "no compulsion in religion" by issuing such a threat? Or, was he just bluffing? Even if he did not mean what he said, didn't he risk the possibility of a war? The above questions in the first printing of the QRT, also occupied some other students of the Quran. The traditional translation the freedom in religion (2:256), the freedom to reject the truth (2:193; 10:99; 18:29), and the promotion of peace among people (2:208). For instance, El Mehdi Haddou, a researcher colleague of mine pulled my attention to the word taMLiKuhum in verse 27:23 and reminded me its meaning, "own them, possess them." He proposed "owning" instead of "leading." Indeed, the derivatives of this word occur 44 times in the Quran and all are relate ownership and possession. I would like to quote from Mehdi's article on this verse: "What really made Solomon angry is the state of slavery that affects the people owned by the Queen of Sheba and not their religion. Solomon's reaction against slavery and oppression should be an example for every leader who has the power, the means and the potential to free slaves and fight for the rights of oppressed people even if they are living in another country. What Solomon did in the past is what the United States should do in our time. Their resemblance is reflected in their military power but the difference resides in the fact that only Solomon has submitted to God's laws. If Solomon was living in the 21st century, who would you think will be at the top of his black list? Yes, many from the so called Muslim countries."

Edip-Layth - End Note 6 (27:34)

It is interesting that Queen is criticizing Kings for their corruption and aggression. The Queen is depicted by the Quran as someone who is not a tyrant, but a reasonable leader who consults others in her affairs, which is one of the main principles in the Quran (42:38). The Queen of Sheba tested Solomon by sending him some gifts. When she learned that he was not interested in her wealth or her country's resources, she became curious about Solomon and accepted his invitation. The event implies more communication between the two leaders and the emergence of a trust between them. Ultimately, she realizes that Solomon is not one of those corrupt kings, but a servant of God with great morals. The Bible mentions this meeting but it contains some differences. For instance, in I Kings 10:1-13 we learn that Solomon accepted her valuable gifts, but the Quran tells us that Solomon showed no interest. The same biblical passage is repeated at II Chronicles 9:1-12.

Edip-Layth - End Note 7 (27:66)

Having doubts about the hereafter is considered to be similar to not accepting it. The Quran does not accept "faith" as is understood by English speaking people; the Quran expects us to acknowledge the hereafter as a fact, by reflecting on circumstantial evidence abundant around us and within us. According to the Quran, those who do not find the Quran sufficient for guidance, those who do not enjoy mentioning God's name alone, and those who expect the intercession of a savior, do not really acknowledge the hereafter. See 6:113,150; 27:66; 34:21; 39:45; 74:46-48.

Edip-Layth - End Note 8 (27:82)

Note that the creature mentioned here is described as dabbatan min al-ard (creature from earth), which means either a creature coming out of earth or a creature made of earthly materials. Could it refer to the computer that became the tool for the discovery of the code 19 and declaration of its message? Unlike the creatures made of water (24:45), this one is made from earthly elements. After the discovery of the code 19, and from the context of this verse, this creature (DaBBa) might be understood as a reference to the computer that uses silicon as its essential part. In traditional books, there are bizarre descriptions of this prophesied creature. Contrary to the Quran's positive depiction of the earth-based creature, hadith books contain negative descriptions. Some may object to our interpretation by saying that the word DaBBa implies something alive that moves. This objection is reasonable. But, we prefer the computer to an animal since we can understand the phrase dabbatan min al-ard not as a creature geographically from earth, but rather a creature made of earth. Thus, we can accept some differences in mobility between the "dabba from water" and "dabba from earth." Since a computer has many moving parts, from its hard disk to the information carried by trillions of electrons, it is not a far-fetched understanding of DaBBa. See 72:24-28.

Edip-Layth - End Note 9 (27:84)

See the relationship between this and verse 10:38-48.

Edip-Layth - End Note 10 (27:88)

Interspersed among the verses about the hereafter, the verses 86 and 88 remind us of examples of God's power that we witness. During the revelation of the Quran, not many people considered the earth a moving object; perhaps none knew about the tectonic movement of mountains. Early commentators of the Quran also could not comprehend this fact. So, they struggled to make sense out of this bizarre claim in their holy book. They claimed that the verse was referring to the end of the world. However, they ignored that the verses describing the last Hour depicted chaos and destruction. The end of the world is a calamity of cosmic proportions, which creates an utmost shock and panic among those who will experience it (See chapter 81 and 101 of the Quran). Thus, the unnoticed event described in 27:88 cannot be about the chaos created by the destruction of the universe. Indeed, the end of the verse 27:88 leaves no room for such confusion: "the making of God who perfected everything." The end of the world is neither the perfection of art, nor an imperceptible event. The early audience of the Quran, unable even to imagine the motion of the mountains and earth, tried hard to reconcile it with the verses describing the destruction, chaos and panic of the end times. See 21:33; 36:40; 39:5; 68:1; 79:30. Since the Bible has been tampered by clergymen (See Quran 2:59), it contains numerous false information about nature and scientific issues. Christendom, up to the 17th century, firmly believed that the earth was a firm center of the universe. The Church persecuted many scientists, including Galileo, for asserting that the earth rotates around the sun. See Psalms 93:1; 96:10; 104:5; 1 Chronicles 16:30.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 1 (27:1)

See Appendix II.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 2 (27:1)

For an explanation of this composite rendering of the adjective, mubin, see note 2 on 12:1. In the present instance, the term kitab ("divine writ") is preceded by the conjunction wa, which primarily signifies "and", but in this case has a function more or less similar to the expression "namely" hence, it may be replaced in translation by a dash without affecting the meaning of the sentence.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 3 (27:3)

This is obviously the meaning of the term zakah in the above context, since at the time of the revelation of this surah it had not yet received its later, specific connotation of a tax incumbent upon Muslims (cf. surah 2 note 34).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 4 (27:4)

The implication is that people who do not believe in life after death concentrate all their endeavours as a rule, on material gains alone, and cannot think of anything worthwhile "beyond their own doings". See also note 7 on 2:7, which explains why the "causing" of this spiritual blindness and confusion - in itself but a consequence of man's own behaviour - is attributed to God.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 5 (27:6)

This stress on the spiritual illumination offered to man through divine revelation not only connects with the opening verses of this surah, but also forms a link between this passage and the following one, which calls to mind the sudden illumination of Moses, symbolized by the vision of the burning bush.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 6 (27:7)

Cf. 20:9 ff., and particularly note 7 on verse 10 of that surah.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 7 (27:8)

Thus Zamakhshari explains the expression hawlaha (lit., "around it"). According to some of the earliest commentators, quoted by Tabari the "fire" (nar) is in this context synonymous with "light" (nur), namely, the illumination which God bestows on His prophets, who - one may presume - <are a priori near it" by virtue of their inborn spiritual sensitivity. Alternatively, the phrase man fi n-nar wa-man hawlaha may be understood as referring to God's Own light, which encompasses, and is the core of, all spiritual illumination.

See note 85 on 7:108.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 15 (27:15)

I.e., spiritual insight.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 16 (27:17)

Apart from 114:6, which contains the earliest Quranic reference to the concept of jinn, the above is apparently the oldest instance where this concept occurs in the personalized form of "invisible beings". (For a fuller discussion, see Appendix III.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 17 (27:19)

In this instance, Solomon evidently refers to his own understanding and admiration of nature (cf. 38:31-33 and the corresponding notes) as well as to his loving compassion for the humblest of God's creatures, as a great divine blessing: and this is the Quranic moral of the legendary story of the ant.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 18 (27:21)

Lit., a clear evidence. The threat of "killing" the hoopoe is, of course, purely idiomatic and not to be taken literally.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 19 (27:22)

Thus, we are parabolically reminded that even the most lowly being can - and on occasion does - have knowledge of things of which even a Solomon in all his wisdom may be ignorant (Razi) - a reminder which ought to counteract the ever-present danger (fitnah) of self-conceit to which learned men, more than anyone else, are exposed (Zamakhshari). As regards the kingdom of Sheba, see note 23 on 34:15.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 20 (27:25)

I.e., their own immoral impulses (which is the meaning of ash-shaytan in this context) had persuaded them that they should not submit to the idea of man's responsibility to a Supreme Being who, by definition, is "beyond the reach of human perception" but should worship certain perceivable natural phenomena instead.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 21 (27:25)

An allusion to the appearance and disappearance of the sun and other celestial bodies which the Sabaeans - in common with almost all the Semites of antiquity - used to worship, (Cf. the story of Abraham's search for God in 6:74 ff.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 22 (27:26)

See surah 9 note 171.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 23 (27:31)

My interpolation, at the beginning of this verse, of the words "God says" is based on the fact that, within the context of the above legend, the information brought by the hoopoe is the very first link between the kingdoms of Sheba and of Solomon. In the absence of any previous contact, hostile or otherwise, there would have been no point whatever in Solomon's telling the people of Sheba that they should not "exalt themselves" against or above himself. On the other hand, the narrative of the hoopoe makes it clear that the Sabaeans did "exalt themselves" against God by worshipping the sun and by being convinced "that they ought not to worship God" (verses 24-25 above). Hence, Solomon, being a prophet, is justified in calling upon them, in the name of God, to abandon this blasphemy and to surrender themselves to Him. (Cf. the almost identical phrase, "Exalt not yourselves against God", in 44:19.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 24 (27:32)

Lit., "on this case [or "problem"] of mine".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 25 (27:34)

In this context - as pointed out by all classical commentators - the term dukhul undoubtedly connotes "entering by force (anwatan)", whether it be by armed invasion or by usurpation of political power from within the country. The term muluk, lit., "kings", may be understood to denote also persons who, while not being "kings" in the conventional sense of this word, wrongfully seize and forcibly hold absolute power over their "subjects".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 26 (27:34)

Thus, the Queen of Sheba rules out force as a suitable method for dealing with Solomon. Implied in her statement is the Quranic condemnation of all political power obtained through violence (anwatan) inasmuch as it is bound to give rise to oppression, suffering and moral corruption.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 27 (27:36)

I.e., not only worldly wealth but also faith, wisdom and an insight into realities normally hidden from other men.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 28 (27:36)

I.e., people who prize only material things and have no inkling of spiritual values.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 29 (27:37)

Lit., "and they will be humbled". Since the Qur'an explicitly prohibits all wars of aggression (see 2:190-194 and the corresponding notes), it is not plausible that this same Qur'an should place a crude threat of warlike aggression in the mouth of a prophet. We must, therefore, assume that here again, as in verse 31 above, it is God who, through His prophet, warns the people of Sheba of His "coming upon them" - i.e., punishing them - unless they abandon their blasphemous belief that they "ought not" to worship God. This interpretation finds considerable support in the sudden change from the singular in which Solomon speaks of himself in the preceding (as well as in the subsequent) verses, to the majestic plural "We" appearing in the above sentence.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 30 (27:38)

I.e., evidently in response to his message (Razi, Ibn Kathir).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 31 (27:38)

Lit., "before they come unto me as people who surrender themselves (muslimin)" i.e., to God (see verse 31 above). The term "throne (arsh)" is used here and in the sequence - as well as at the end of verse 23 - in its metonymic sense of "dominion" or "regal power" (Raghib). It appears that Solomon intends to confront his guest with an image of her worldly power, and thus to convince her that her "throne" is as nothing when compared with the awesome almightiness of God.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 32 (27:40)

Lit., "he who had knowledge out of [or "through"] revelation (al-kitab)" - i.e., Solomon himself (Razi).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 33 (27:40)

I.e., faster than any magic could achieve: thus alluding to the symbolic nature of the forthcoming appearance of the "throne". Here, as in the whole of the story of Solomon and the Queen of Sheba, symbolism and legendary "fact" are subtly intertwined, evolving into an allegory of the human soul's awakening to a gradual realization of spiritual values.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 34 (27:40)

Lit., "established before him". Since the verbal form istaqarra and its participle mustaqirra often indicate no more than that something "has being" or "exists" (cf. Lane VII, 2500), the phrase ra'ahu mustaqirran indahu may be understood as "he saw it being (i.e., actually) before him": hence my rendering.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 35 (27:40)

I.e., "whether I attribute my spiritual powers to God or, vaingloriously, to myself".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 36 (27:41)

I.e., whether she remains satisfied with perceiving only the outward appearance of things and happenings, or endeavours to fathom their spiritual reality. Seeing that the people of Sheba were, until then, motivated by love of luxury and worldly power. Solomon intends to show the Queen her "throne", or the image of her dominion, as it could be if it were inspired by faith in God and, hence, by a consciousness of moral responsibility.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 37 (27:42)

Sc., "and yet not quite the same": thus, she expresses doubt - and doubt is the first step in all spiritual progress. She realizes that the "altered throne" is outwardly the same as that which she has left behind; but she perceives intuitively that it is imbued with a spiritual quality which the other did not possess, and which she cannot yet quite understand.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 38 (27:42)

Thus Tabari, Zamakhshari and Ibn Kathir, on whose interpretation of this passage my rendering and the above interpolation are based.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 39 (27:43)

An allusion to her and her people's worship of celestial bodies (cf. verses 24-25 and the corresponding notes 20 and 21).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 40 (27:43)

Lit., "she was (sc., "born") of people", etc. - thus stressing the role of the idolatrous tradition in which she had grown up, and which in the past had made it difficult for her to find the right path. Considering this cultural background, Solomon points out, her awakening at the very moment of her leaving her ancestral environment must be deemed most remarkable and praiseworthy.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 41 (27:44)

I.e., in order to wade into it, or perhaps to swim through it, thus braving the seemingly fathomless deep: possibly a symbolic indication of the fear which a human being may feel when his own search after truth forces him to abandon the warm, soothing security of his erstwhile social and mental environment, and to venture into the - as yet - unknown realm of the spirit.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 42 (27:44)

I.e., not a dangerous, bottomless deep, as it appeared at first glance, but, rather, the firm, glass-clear light of truth: and with her perception of the ever-existing difference between appearance and reality, the Queen of Sheba comes to the end of her spiritual journey.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 43 (27:45)

For the story of the Thamud and their prophet Salih, see notes 56 and 57 on 7:73. [My interpolation of the word "likewise" at the beginning of this verse is based on the fact that Salih's message to the tribe of Thamud is identical with that of Solomon to the Queen of Sheba - which, in itself, is an indication of the sameness of the fundamental truths underlying all revealed religions.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 44 (27:46)

Lit., "hasten the evil before the good": cf. 13:6 and the corresponding note 14; also the second sentence of 10:50 and note 71.

Or "nine clans", since, in the above context, the term raht is liable to either of these two interpretations. The "city" referred to is evidently the region known as Al-Hijr, in northern Hijaz (cf. surah 7 notes 56 and 59). In contrast with the preceding story of the Queen of Sheba's eager way to faith, the stories of the tribe of Thamud and (in verses 54-58) of Lot's people are meant to call attention to the hostility which a call to righteousness so often evokes in people who are strong but vain, or, alternatively, weak and addicted to senseless passions.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 48 (27:49)

Lit., "by God". As is evident from 7:73 ff. and from the above allusion, the Thamud did have a vague notion of God, but their erstwhile faith had been overlaid by their excessive arrogance and thus deprived of all spiritual value.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 61 (27:64)

As in 10:31, the term "sustenance" (rizq) has here both a physical and a spiritual connotation; hence the phrase, "out of heaven and earth".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 62 (27:64)

Lit., "if you are truthful" - the implication being that most people who profess a belief in a multiplicity of divine powers, or even in the possibility of the one God's "incarnation" in a created being, do so blindly, sometimes only under the influence of inherited cultural traditions and habits of thought, and not out of a reasoned conviction.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 63 (27:65)

In this context, the term al-ghayb - rendered by me here as "the hidden reality" - apparently relates to the "how" of God's Being, the ultimate reality underlying the observable aspects of the universe and the meaning and purpose inherent in its creation. My repetition, within brackets, of the words "none knows it", i.e., save God, is necessitated by the fact that He is infinite, unlimited as to space, and cannot, therefore, be included among the beings "in the heavens or on earth", who have all been created by Him.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 64 (27:66)

I.e., they cannot truly visualize the hereafter because its reality is beyond anything that man may experience in this world: and this, it cannot be stressed often enough, is an indirect explanation of the reason why all Quranic references to the conditions, good or bad, of man's life after death are of necessity expressed in purely allegorical terms.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 65 (27:66)

I.e., blind to its logical necessity within God's plan of creation. For, it is only on the premise of a life after death that the concept of man's moral responsibility and hence, of God's ultimate judgment can have any meaning; and if there is no moral responsibility, there can be no question of a preceding moral choice; and if the absence of choice is taken for granted, all differentiation between right and wrong becomes utterly meaningless as well.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 66 (27:69)

I.e., those who denied the reality of a life after death and, hence, of man's ultimate responsibility for his conscious doings. As pointed out in the preceding note, the unavoidable consequence of this denial is the loss of all sense of right and wrong: and this, in its turn, leads to spiritual and social chaos, and so to the downfall of communities and civilizations.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 67 (27:70)

Lit., "by their scheming". For the Quranic use of the term makr in the sense of "devising false arguments [against something]", see 10:21 and the corresponding note 33.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 68 (27:72)

I.e., the end of their own life, which must precede their resurrection.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 69 (27:76)

For this rendering of the verb yaqussu, see note 5 on 12:3.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 70 (27:76)

I.e., where they differ from the truth made evident to them in their scriptures. The term "children of Israel" comprises here both the Jews and the Christians (Zamakhshari) inasmuch as both follow the Old Testament, albeit in a corrupted form. It is precisely because of this corruption, and because of the great influence, which Jewish and Christian ideas exert over a large segment of mankind, that the Qur'an sets out to explain certain ethical truths to both these communities. The above reference to "most" (and not all) of the problems alluded to in this context shows that the present passage bears only on man's moral outlook and social life in this world and not on ultimate, metaphysical questions which - as the Qur'an so often repeats - will be answered only in the hereafter.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 71 (27:79)

Lit., "thou art [or "standest"] upon the obvious [or "self-evident"] truth".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 72 (27:81)

This passage corresponds to the oft-repeated Quranic statement that "God guides him that wills [to be guided] (yahdi man yasha)".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 73 (27:82)

Lit., "comes to pass against them" - i.e., when the truth becomes obvious to them against all their expectations, and thus confounds them utterly: an allusion to the approach of the Last Hour, Resurrection and God's Judgment, all of which they were wont to regard as "fables of ancient times" (cf. verses 67-68 above). Alternatively, the phrase idha waqa a al-qawl alayhim may be understood as when the sentence [of doom] is passed on them", i.e., at the approach of the Last Hour, when it will be too late for repentance.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 74 (27:82)

The "creature brought forth out of the earth" is apparently an allegory of man's "earthly" outlook on life - in other words, the soul-destroying materialism characteristic of the time preceding the Last Hour. This "creature" parabolically "tells" men that their submergence in exclusively materialistic values - and, hence, their approaching self-destruction - is an outcome of their lack of belief in God. (See also 7:175-176 and the corresponding note 141.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 75 (27:84)

Or: "the sentence [of doom] will have been passed on them in recompense of", etc. (see note 73 above)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 77 (27:86)

In the present context (as in 10:67 or 40:61) the reference to "night" and "day" has a symbolic significance: namely, man's God-given ability to gain insight through conscious reasoning ("the day that makes them see") as well as through the intuition that comes from a restful surrender to the voice of one's own heart ("the night made for rest") - both of which tell us that the existence of God is a logical necessity, and that a rejection of His messages is a sin against ourselves.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 78 (27:88)

I.e., in perfect consonance with the purpose for which He has created them: which is the approximate meaning of the verb atqana. In this particular instance, stress is laid on the God-willed transitory nature of the world, as we know it, (cf. 14:48 and 20:105-107, and the corresponding notes) in contrast with the lasting reality of the life to come.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 79 (27:89)

Lit., "good shall be his from it", i.e., inconsequence or in result of it (Ibn Abbas, Al-Hasan, Qatadah, Ibn Jurayj, all of them quoted by Tabari) - thus stressing the Quranic doctrine that what is metaphorically described as "rewards" and "punishments" in the life to come are but the natural consequences, good or bad, of man's attitudes and doings in this world. On a different level, the above phrase may also be understood thus: "Whoever shall come with a good deed will gain something better than [or "through"] it" - an illusion to the fact that whereas the deed itself may be transitory, its merit is enduring (Zamakhshari).

Their Kingdom included today's whole of Yemen, Somalia and Ethiopia, and boasting a strong army, they frequently had expansive designs further south and up north. As the inevitable result of worshiping multiple false deities, including the sun, their society was not without inequities of caste and creed. Solomon, the King and the prophet, planned to subdue the Sheba Empire to thwart their aggressive designs and to protect the region from oppression. And he succeeded magnificently. 6:65. Dabbatam-min-Al-ardh may apply to the humbled ones just as 'mountains' in several places in the Qur'an indicate the elite. The common understanding of this term as 'a creature coming out of the earth', in my humble opinion, is incorrect. For, supra-natural phenomena stand contrary to the Changeless Divine laws. The error is the result of trying to give literal meaning to an allegory in blind following of fabricated Ahadith. The creature out of earth may also refer to man's earthly and materialistic outlook on life

The Monotheist Group	28:8 Then the family of Pharaoh picked him up, so he would be an enemy to them and a source of sadness. Certainly, Pharaoh and Haamaan and their troops were doing wrong.
Muhammad Asad	28:8 And [some of] Pharaoh's household 9 found [and spared] him: for [We had willed] that he becomes an enemy unto them and [a source of] grief, seeing that Pharaoh and Haman and their hosts were sinners indeed!
Rashad Khalifa	28:8 Pharaoh's family picked him up, only to have him lead the opposition and to be a source of grief for them. That is because Pharaoh, Hamaan, and their troops were transgressors.
Shabbir Ahmed	28:8 And the family of Pharaoh picked him up, not knowing that he would become an enemy to them and a source of grief. That is because Pharaoh, Hamaan and their troops were a people bent on committing fault upon fault.

Muhammad Asad	28:15 And [one day] he entered the city at a time when [most of] its people were [resting in their houses,] unaware of what was going on [in the streets]; ¹³ and there he encountered two men fighting with one another - one of his own people, ¹⁴ and the other of his enemies. And the one who belonged to his own people cried out to him for help against him who was of his enemies - whereupon Moses struck him down with his fist, and [thus] brought about his end. [But then] he said [to himself]: This is of Satan's doing! Verily, he is an open foe, leading [man] astray!"¹⁵
Rashad Khalifa	Moses Commits Manslaughter 28:15 Once he entered the city unexpectedly, without being recognized by the people. He found two men fighting; one was (a Hebrew) from his people, and the other was (an Egyptian) from his enemies. The one from his people called on him for help against his enemy. Moses punched him, killing him. He said, "This is the work of the devil; he is a real enemy, and a profound misleader."
Shabbir Ahmed	28:15 And one day the young Moses entered the city at a time when most of its people were resting unaware of what was going on in the streets. And there he encountered two men fighting with each other. One was of his people (a Hebrew) and the other of his (Egyptian) adversaries. His tribesman cried out to him for help against the one who was of the enemies - Whereupon Moses struck him with his fist and thus, (accidentally) brought about his end. But then he said to himself, "This is of Satan's doing! Surely, he is an open enemy, a misleader." ⁴

Edip-Layth	28:23 When he arrived at the watering hole of Midyan, he found a crowd of people watering. He noticed two women waiting on the side. He said, "What is holding you back." They said, "We cannot draw water until the shepherds finish, and our father is an old man."
The Monotheist Group	28:23 When he arrived at the watering hole of Midyan, he found a crowd of people watering, and he noticed two women waiting on the side. He said: "What is holding you back." They said: "We cannot draw water until the shepherds finish, and our father is an old man."
Muhammad Asad	28:23 NOW WHEN he arrived at the wells ²¹ of Madyan, he found there a large group of men who were watering [their herds and flocks]; and at some distance from them he came upon two women who were keeping back their flock. He asked [them]: What is the matter with you?" They answered: We cannot water [our animals] until the herdsmen drive [theirs] home - for [we are weak and] our father is a very old man."
Rashad Khalifa	28:23 When he reached Midyan's water, he found a crowd of people watering, and noticed two women waiting on the side. He said, "What is it that you need?" They said, "We are not able to water, until the crowd disperses, and our father is an old man."

Shabbir Ahmed	28:23 When he arrived at the wells of Midyan, he found a crowd of people watering their herds and flocks. And he found two women who were keeping away their flocks. He asked, "What is the matter with you?" They said, "We cannot water our flocks until the shepherds take back their flocks. And our father is a very old man."
